FRENCH GOVERNMENT AND LA LANTERNE.

General elections in Great Britain, the United States and France, take place now. The preliminaries to the contest have characteristics peculiar to the different nations. In the first two the excitement rises to the boiling point, and the passions which would lead everything to shipwreck escapes with a good roaring, the importance of causes being a sign of safety. In France, as is well known, only a small boiler is given to the steam from the overheated boilers giving token that it is ready for mischief. The safety valve is tied down, and the engineer says he has to keep all secure. Some fine day possibly he may be picked up among the rivets, and the machinery in pieces, and the whole frame-work into a thousand fragments. As the crisis draw near the Emperor is strangely nervous to secure the return of his friends; the prefects have received the hint; electors are warned; the masses are cautioned. Freedom of the press is a mockery; the modification of the laws, of which so much was said, proved as illusory as other promised reforms. One of the misfortunes of a government, which professes to make the private interests of the people regulate their affairs, to provide for the support, food and shelter, and to fix the price of all commodities, is to be found while in good seasons it is regarded as having done nothing towards the enjoyment which the people may enjoy, in times of depression and scarcity it is looked upon as the author of all the evils that are complained of, the source of all the misfortunes that trouble the people. It was this in great part prompted the alterations in Paris, so that employment might be found for the working people. Louis Philippe, it is true, was charged with having under pretence of forming the city, erected a series of forts which command the different points from which they had formerly originated insurrections which they had spread, and Napoleon has had the credit of carrying out this idea in a more effective form, by rooting out the nests of houses in the narrow and winding streets and laying out straight avenues and spacious boulevards, which can be commanded by the forts, and cannot be barricaded, as was the case with the little narrow lanes. That may be well, and probably was one of Napoleon's objects, but the other was not the least. Universal suffrage has become a fact, the number of votes is calculated beforehand, a reign of terrorism is firmly established, and no man dare breathe a word of doubt as to the wisdom of the measures taken by the Government, except at the peril—least of all a journalist. The Marquis de Rochefort will not tend to make matters more pleasant. His paper, La Lanterne, became a power in a single day, and attained, it is said, the enormous circulation of 120,000. Caustic, cutting, touching everything by turns, and sparing no official of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, the Emperor himself not excepted, it was hard as any, de Rochefort had himself particularly obnoxious. Prosecutions, persecutions would be the more immediate term, followed one after another. Police spies dogged his steps; inducements were offered him, to induce him to commit a breach of the peace; articles of a unique were sent by the Government, of sufficient length to fill the whole or half the whole sheet, to the exclusion of the writer's own productions. At last the irritation became more than he could bear. A series of scurrilous articles appeared against him in L'Infexible, a journal established for the express purpose of defaming him and other liberal writers. Wolff, one of the editors of the Figaro, prosecuted the matter before a Criminal Court, proved his case, and had his libellers fined one franc, with one franc costs, or two days' imprisonment. For such an offence the magistrate has power—a power not unfrequently exercised—to inflict a heavy fine and a long imprisonment besides. De Rochefort tried a civil action, but in the meantime he learned that still grosser charges than those already brought against him were prepared, and would be ready for publication immediately, that arrangements were made for having them circulated in a school in which his daughter was a pupil, and that they were also to be put into hands, he went to the printer, accompanied by two friends as witnesses, and tried by remonstrance to prevail on him not to print them. Failing remonstrance, he intended to try to force on a duel, the alterations being useless and the duel being of no avail, de Rochefort struck the printer, and instituted a suit for assault. The two parties were thus decided. The action brought by de Rochefort against the author of the libel affecting him was met by a counter action. The libellers were fined 500 francs, but in return de Rochefort had to pay them 500 francs in the cross action. He was forced to pay them the 500, but had no means of compelling them to pay him the 3,000, so that the play was not in fact worth the candle. On the other hand, in the assault case brought against the printer, he was condemned to a fine of 200 francs, to be imprisoned two months, and to have three months further imprisonment if the fine were not paid. The paper was seized, the eleventh number being so effectually taken possession of that scarcely a copy could be obtained, the police matching any that had escaped into the hands of those who had them on the street. The few that had been put in circulation had been got out before the regular time of publication, so as to evade search by the police. De Rochefort had escaped and succeeded in escaping to Brussels, where he still intends to continue the issue. In his last number (the eleventh) he enters into a history of his persecutions. Were these facts not conclusively proved it would read like fiction. "I am," he says, "an exile. I knew better than anyone how to humiliate the Government are as to my victims. They have played their game and won." That under the present reign the French Government could not allow the Lanterne to exist cannot be doubted for a moment. But it is precisely because the system is what it is, that the paper is dangerous or even annoying. Elsewhere people are allowed to say what they choose, as a general rule, and such a paper would excite but little attention. It certainly would not secure the circulation that La Lanterne obtained. But the French have been so long unused to a free press that their first efforts are apt to degenerate into licence, and this is made the excuse for reimposing the restrictions. The mistakes and blunders, the financial embarrassments and restless uneasy feeling everywhere prevailing, do not present any very gratifying assurance of long continued peace, or absence of internal troubles, and this is what makes the La Lanterne affair so important an event at the present moment. —Montreal Herald.

REV. EDWARD A. WILSON,
No. 165 South Second Street, Williamsburgh, New York.

ADDRESS TO THE NERVOUS AND DEBILITATED, whose sufferings have been protracted from hidden causes, and whose cases require prompt treatment to render existence desirable. If you are suffering, or have suffered from involuntary discharges, what effect does it produce upon your general health? Do you feel weak, debilitated, easily tired? Does a little extra exertion produce palpitation of the heart? Does your liver, or urinary organs, or your kidneys, frequently get out of order? Is your urine sometimes thick, milky, or ropy, or is it ropy on settling? Or does a thick scum rise to the top? Or is a sediment at the bottom after it has stood awhile? Do you have spells of short breathing or dyspepsia? Are your bowels constipated? Do you have spells of fainting, or rushes of blood to the head? Is your memory impaired? Is your mind constantly dwelling upon this subject? Do you feel dull, listless, moping, tired of company, of life? Do you wish to be left alone, to get away from everybody? Does any little thing make you start or jump? Is your sleep broken or restless? Is the lustre of your eye as brilliant? The bloom on your cheek as bright? Do you enjoy yourself in society as well? Do you pursue your business with the same energy? Do you feel as much confidence in yourself? Are your spirits dull and flagging, given to fits of melancholy? If so, do not lay it to your liver or dyspepsia. Have you restless nights? Your back weak, your knees weak, and have but little appetite, and you attribute this to dyspepsia or liver-complaint?

Now, reader, self-abuse, venereal diseases badly cured, and sexual excesses, are all capable of producing a weakness of the generative organs. The organs of generation, when in perfect health, make the man. Did you ever think that those bold, defiant, energetic, persevering, successful business-men are always those whose generative organs are in perfect health? You never hear such men complain of being melancholy, of nervousness, of palpitation of the heart. They are never afraid they cannot succeed in business; they don't become sad and discouraged; they are always polite and pleasant in the company of ladies, and look you and them right in the face—none of your downcast looks or any other meanness about them. I do not mean those who keep the organs inflated by running to excess. These will not only ruin their constitutions, but also those they do business with or for.

How many men, from badly-cured diseases, from the effects of self-abuse and excesses, have brought about that state of weakness in those organs that has reduced the general system so much as to induce almost every other disease—idiocy, lunacy, paralysis, spinal affections, suicide, and almost every other form of disease which humanity is heir to, and the real cause of the trouble scarcely ever suspected, and have doctored for all but the right one.

Diseases of these organs require the use of a Diuretic.

HELMBOLD'S FLUID EXTRACT BUCHU

Is the great Diuretic, and is a certain cure for diseases of the Bladder, Kidneys, Gravel, Dropsy, Organic Weakness, Female Complaints, General Debility, and all diseases of the Urinary Organs, whether existing in Male or Female, from whatever cause originating, and no matter of how long standing.

If no treatment is submitted to, Consumption or Insanity may ensue. Our flesh and blood are supported from these sources, and the health and happiness, and that of Posterity, depends upon prompt use of a reliable remedy.

Helmbold's Extract Buchu, established upward of 18 years, prepared by H. T. HELMBOLD, Druggist, 494, New York, and 104, South 10th Street, Philadelphia, Pa. PRICE—$1,25 per bottle, or six bottles for $3,50, delivered to any address. Sold by all Druggists everywhere.

None are genuine unless done up in steel-engraved wrapper, with fac-simile of my Chemical Warehouse, and signed

H. T. HELMBOLD.
