POLICE COURT, Tuesday.—There were only three names on the docket of the court this morning. Margaret Spooner, an unfortunate vagrant, whose only crime is poverty and whose only place of refuge is the common gaol, appeared at the dock and requested the magistrate to return her to her old lodgings for one month longer, a request which the magistrate complied with. Ellen Green, one of the denizens of the Grove, appeared on a charge of vagrancy, and was allowed to depart with an admonition. Thomas Gipson, against whose name was the charge of drunkenness, was sent to gaol for ten days to allow of time for him to become quite sober, and enable him to keep his promise of abstaining from strong drink, and of returning to his home in the country.
