THE TRIAL OF WHALEN.

THIRD DAY.

Ottawa, September 9.

John Downes sworn—Am driver for Patrick Buckley; I know prisoner slightly; I first knew him at Quebec under the name of Sullivan about three years ago; saw him a couple of times in Ottawa before that night, knew him as the same; had known him in Quebec as Sullivan; the last time I saw him was near the door of the Parliament House, when I drove up Sir John A. Macdonald; he was leaning against the door that night about nine o'clock; after I came back from feeding my horse; he was there when I got back; he then went in; he was alone; I saw him again about an hour after; but I can't rightly say; he was coming out, and went in the direction of the Russell House; I saw Whalen go in again at one; he came out again; I am not sure as to the time; he stood about the door and went in again; he was not long standing; he came out again in a few minutes; the House adjourned then, and I drove away; before he went in the last time I asked him if the House was near adjourning, and he said he did not know, but when he came out he said they were all coming; Sir John A. Macdonald and Buckley were coming out; Sir John went into the carriage, and left Buckley standing; I drove away; Whalen was going down the centre walk, straight down towards Wellington street; I saw no one with Whalen; that night he was the first to come out when the House adjourned.

Wm. Graham sworn—Was employed last session as a door-keeper in the Commons; my duty was to receive the tickets from those going to the public gallery; the entrance is by the first door to the right after coming into the main lobby; Buckley's seat was close to it; saw prisoner several times; he was what might be considered a general visitor, during the second part of last session particularly; he visited the House nightly from that time; I recollect seeing the prisoner three times on that night; he gave me three tickets; one each time; he went up to the gallery between half-past nine and a quarter before twelve; the first time he went up he remained about a quarter of an hour; he had a general conversation with Buckley; the two appeared to be intimate acquaintances; every time I saw him he always had an interview with Buckley before going to the gallery; they spoke in so low a voice and so low a tone that I could not hear what they said; there might be three-quarters of an hour between each time of coming down and going back; he took my attention more that night than any other; he appeared to be very much excited; he had on a black frock-coat, cap, and light pants; he had on a cravat with greenish braid round part of it; a quarter before twelve he gave me the last ticket; that was the last time I saw him; there are other passages he could make his way up, but not to this gallery; did not see McGee leave the House; don't recollect seeing him that night, but I understood he was in the House.

To J. H. Cameron—Said that from the time Mr McGee was able to be in the House Whalen was a visitor; was told that McGee addressed the House, but did not know it of my own knowledge.

The clothes of the murdered man were here brought into Court; when Whalen saw them brought in he seemed fascinated, and an expression almost of horror came over his face.

Detective John O'Neil sworn—Recollect the morning of Mr McGee's assassination; it was the morning of the 7th April. Made search for the parties who committed the crime. Received information from various parties—Patrick Buckley among others—that led me to arrest prisoner in Michael Starr's tavern, Clarence street, immediately behind the market. It was about half-past 9 in the evening of the 7th. Am not clear as to the time I found him in the bar-room. Detective Cullen; Sergeant Donohoe, Water Police, Montreal; Davis of Ottawa, went with me into the house. Constable O'Keefe went to the back door. Asked his name on entering. He said James Whalen, and I told him to stand, and to raise his hands until searched. Found a box of cartridges [Produced and shown]. Found in his right hand pocket some tickets and a paper, the Irish American for the week ending March 7, 1868; green badge Toronto Hibernian Benevolent Society, established 1858, with the sunburst and phœnix on it; a card of membership of St. Patrick's benevolent Society, dues paid up to last December, the collecting Treasurer's name signed Thos. C.; tickets for the Shamrock Society ball; ticket St. Patrick's Society; two tickets Shamrock Quadrille Club, one blank the other admit Mr Jas. Whalen and ladies, W. D. O'Brien, Secretary and Treasurer, no date; the blank one is also signed by O'Brien. Sergt. Davis took a revolver from Whalen; saw him take it; besides there were other papers and a cleaner like a ramrod taken by Donohoe. The cartridges are known as the Lett cartridge; are marked C. D., and are used in the Smith & Wesson revolver. Some of these have five, some six chambers.

Revolver produced by Davis.

F. Davis sworn—Am police officer. Was with O'Neil at Michael Starr's. Searched and found the pistol on prisoner; it was loaded. Knew prisoner. Had known him at Eagleson's the tailor, as I had seen him working there, although I did not know his name.

O'Neil recalled—This I believe to be the revolver. When taken out I examined it at once. Five cartridges in it appeared to have been there some time. One seemed to have been recently put in. On the top of each ball fresh grease was pressed into the chamber. In one chamber it was all round the ball, as if care was taken to do it. The grease is still there; the grease on the cartridge was dark as if old; the other was fresh; the interior of barrel seemed recently greased, but muzzle was marked with fresh powder, as if recently fired off; the one cartridge was quite different from the others. They were covered with dirt as if not moved for some time; the sixth was clear of all dirt around the edge; there was no grease around the copper end; the flange on the one was a little thicker than on the others. Dr. Van Courtland gave me a bullet and some teeth produced. I believe that bullet came from a cartridge same size as this taken from Whalen. I took prisoner to the police lock-up; told him he was seen in the gallery when House adjourned; he said he came away before it adjourned, passed post office across Sapper's bridge, straight home down Sussex street to Starr's. He said, why should I be remarked going there that night, when I was often enough there before? He made no other statement to me.

Mr O'Reilly produced the Irish American.

Mr M. C. Cameron said they were in an awkward position with the amount of prejudice against the prisoner. It was dangerous to object to anything.

Mr O'Reilly said he would not in the meantime produce the paper.

Eliza Tierney after being sworn, was asked as to her age, her education, if she knew her catechism, &c. She has not been to school but has learned catechism; she is about 14 years old, intelligent looking, but entirely uneducated; she said—lived at Michael Starr's; went to Starr's six weeks before; knew the prisoner; he was there when I came and boarded till Mr McGee was shot; his room was the middle room, first flat up stairs; have been in that room; saw a pistol in the looking glass drawer; did not look at it particularly; saw a pistol on a chair in Whalen's bed room; Whalen was in bed and the chair was near the bed; it was about half-past seven in the morning; that was about a week after I saw it in the drawer; remember the Monday night before Whalen was arrested; Whalen went out after supper; he was dressed in light pants, black vest and black coat; had a cap on, did not see him again that night; I went to bed, and saw him next morning coming down stairs between 6 and 7 o'clock; breakfast is at half-past seven; he took no breakfast but went out; he washed himself in the dining-room. Mr Dillon told the ostler, girl and Whalen that McGee was shot. Whalen said nothing. He went up stairs, dressed, and went out. Know a person called Kilby. Starr and he were in the bar when Whalen went in. I saw Whalen about dinner time. The back door is not fastened at night.

To M. C. Cameron: Whalen asked if breakfast was ready, but took none.

Jos. Faulkner, sworn—I live at Huntingdon; lived in Montreal about four years, till last March; am a tailor; know Whalen since June 1867; remember the Montreal election between Devlin and McGee; Whalen was in Montreal then; we both worked for Mr Anderson, of Great St. James' street; we used to converse occasionally. Knew McGee by sight. We used all to speak of him in the shop. Heard prisoner in speaking of him say he had deserted his principles, and he was opposed to him. After reading a paper one day, I think a speech of Mr McGee's, the prisoner said he was a traitor, and deserved to be shot. It was about the election times. It was about six or seven months before I left Montreal. He was always very much opposed to McGee in political principles. I heard him say McGee inoculated him when young with his principles, and now blamed him for sticking to them; remember the picnic after the election; a short time before the prisoner told me he was to the picnic, he had a pistol in his hand which he pulled out of his pocket; it was a common revolver like this shown; he took out his pistol to show me it; I asked him why he was going to a pleasure party with a weapon; he said there had been a row at a picnic before and he might want to defend himself; he expected there would be a row on board; if not wanted they were going to land on the Island and practise. In the shop the prisoner was close along side of me; one of the men in the shop said prisoner would shoot McGee with it like a rat. Nothing had led to this remark. Prisoner might not have heard it. During the election prisoner did not work much, he was chiefly attending to the election.

Mr O'Reilly—What are prisoner's politics?

Mr J. H. Cameron—You must show enmity against Mr McGee.

Mr O'Reilly—I will show that.

Mr J. H. Cameron objected to the question.

The Court said they could call the witness again.

James Inglis, sworn—Live in Montreal and am a collector of accounts; know prisoner since 21st of April, 1867; met him in his own house; I boarded there; arrived here from Dalkeith; recollect a conversation before the election; don't remember the words that preceded, but Whalen said if McGee was elected he would not reign or keep it long; I said who would touch him? He said "I would, if nobody else would;" remember hearing the prisoner call McGee a traitor to his country shortly before the election; he came to my room after the election, about the end of September or the first of October; he was cleaning his revolver; he said he was as far up as McGee's house last night; he left the room immediately; when the prisoner called McGee a traitor, he said after all the Irishmen done for him, he was ungrateful; recollect nothing more in the way of a threat; I was at Mrs Scanlan's on several occasions and met Whalen there; there he was playing cards; recollect New Year's night, was not living with Whalen then.

To M. C. Cameron—I was unconcerned about both parties; don't remember ever having discussed McGee with Whalen; he knew I was a Scotchman; the political feeling ran high, the candidates said hard things of each other; heard a good many things said against McGee; did not attach much importance to what prisoner said.

Leon Diguez, sworn—Work at the Chaudiere; remember the morning McGee was murdered; don't know the day; saw the body on the sidewalk; it was about two o'clock in the morning; was going to Chaudiere; I had gone to Lapierre's, and was there a good spell; had no sleep that night; met a man on the bridge walking very fast; it was dark, but it looked to be Lacroix; would not like to swear positively; thought from his appearance it was Lacroix; had known him before; as I passed Trotter's they were picking up the man.

Mrs McKenna, sworn—Live opposite Mrs Trotter's; know prisoner by sight; saw him first with Doyle, now a prisoner; they stayed in my bar nearly two hours about three weeks before the murder; the following night between one and two Whalen came in to wait for Doyle; he remained till about eleven o'clock; went out two or three times; told him I did not think Doyle would come at that time of night; the night following he came very late, after twelve; the place was shut, but he came in by the side door; he remained till about two o'clock; he said that Parliament had closed at twenty minutes past twelve; something he said to the girl frightened her, and she ran off to bed, while I was out of the room; he did not go out till he finally left, that was, I think, the Thursday preceding the murder.

Alex. J. Turner sworn—Lived in Montreal last year; was employed in the St. Lawrence Hall; became acquainted with Bernard Lansey in the fall of 1866; went to board at prisoner's house; have been in Whalen's company; was at the theatre with prisoner; before the election I heard threats used at Mr McDonald's St. Lawrence Hotel, Main street, by prisoner; he said he would as soon take McGee's life as take a cup of tea; he said this at his own house while reading McGee's speech about the Fenians; the prisoner seemed very much enraged and had some words with his wife; he said he would go up and blow McGee's bloody brains out; he had a revolver at that time; he went out that night and returned the following day; I saw prisoner at Feck's restaurant; he said he had been up to McGee's house the night previous and that Enright was with him; he did not say for what; saw McGee pass up Notre Dame street in a carriage a few days after the election; was alone at the time; he said it was a good job McGee's house was not in flames last night; heard him threaten the life of McGee again in his own house after the election; he said, although McGee was elected the bloody old pig would not reign long, I will blow his bloody brains out before the Session is over; he gave no reason; told McGee in Notre Dame street of the feeling of Whalen to him; said there were parties accommodated in Scanlan's who threatened to do him bodily harm, if they did not intend to kill; he asked if they were interested in Devlin; I said yes; he said it was only election excitement, and would blow over, but to tell him if anything more happened; did not see him again till I saw him speaking in the House of Commons; heard prisoner say McGee received money from the Fenians, but the bloody old pig was a traitor to his country, and turned over to the Protestants; believe Kinsella saw me speak to McGee. Was then called an informer. Mentioned to Kinsella that prisoner would get himself into trouble if anything happened to McGee. Stopped at the Russell here. Was called an informer by Murphy. Now a person named Doyle. He was a chum of Whalen's. He lived in the Russell House. Saw them together in Montreal; there was great intimacy among them; left Montreal for Ottawa in November; saw prisoner here in December or end of November; remember him going to Montreal in December, before Christmas; recollect when he returned; I was then in Russell house; Whalen came several times to see Doyle; have seen them in close conversation in the passage to the glass parting at the head of the dining room; he came probably a dozen times; Doyle asked Whalen if he had been up to D'Arcy McGee's; prisoner said yes; that was after New Year; Doyle said 'did D'Arcy open the door;' prisoner said 'no by J——s, for if he had I would shoot the b——r like a dog;' he said McGee's brother opened the door and took him up stairs, but the bloody bastard locked the door before he let him up. Prisoner told McGee he had come to give information about some one who was going to set fire to his house on the following morning. He said McGee gave him a letter. He told me that they opened the bloody letter and had a good laugh at it before they took it to the police station. Doyle then saw me looking through the chink of the door, and ceased talking about McGee. I went out. Doyle and prisoner reddened up in the face. Am from London. Am here two years, I was in India as a soldier. Left the service and returned to London. Was between 15 and 16 years old when I enlisted. Was in the service about 4 years when discharged on account of sickness. Was at Lucknow.

To M. C. Cameron—(The cross-examination related to witness's past history). I had not left St. Lawrence Hall when the conversations spoken of took place. Boarded with Whalen from July, 1867. Boarded nowhere else in Montreal. Was dismissed from St. Lawrence on account of a quarrel with the head waiter. Macy Johnson, Jas. Inglis, a book-keeper, and another man a shoemaker, but don't know his name, were, besides myself, boarding at Whalen's. I was three weeks at prisoner's before I got into the Ottawa Hotel. After that I boarded there and only slept at prisoner's. The night of the conversation at McDonald's we went there from the theatre. I believe the prisoner got half a dollar from his wife to go. We met a man named Kelly going there. All three went to McDonald's after the theatre. I don't know the date. It was before the election. We had some drinks. Whalen was under the influence of liquor. They got talking about the election. I was not interested in the election, although was glad McGee got in. Believe McGee's name was spoken of in the theatre. They were playing a piece and prisoner was talking, when a man behind said, "hush." Prisoner turned round and choked him, and a friend of the man that was getting choked, said "take care, that's one of Devlin's men," referring to the prisoner. In McDonald's, prisoner spoke of his wife, and said he loved dearly a young girl in Quebec, but that he did not care for life and would as soon take McGee's life as a cup of tea. We went home about 5 o'clock. I was not swipy. There were others in the bar. Prisoner and I were in a separate room. The next threats that were made use of were in Whalen's own house, close on election time; it was between 7 and 8 in the evening. (The witness emphatically repeated that the prisoner threatened, immediately after reading a speech of McGee's, that he would go and blow his brains out). Was asked if I gave information to the authorities, and said no; had told the man now in his grave. (Deposition read). Said on the morning of murder, "Good God, that must be no one but Whalen."

The counsel, taking the deposition, pointed out that nothing was said of this, or the letter, or Doyle and Whalen talking about it, although John McGee was examined before him

Cross-examined—It was between 12 and 1 in the afternoon when the conversation between Doyle and the prisoner took place; they stopped talking when Doyle saw me; they turned all colours when they saw me; there are two doors in the glass pantry; it was through the door leading to the passage I saw them; they were not speaking loud, but I could hear them as soon as I went in to wash my hands; I heard McGee's name mentioned; that called my attention to them; I had gone in quietly; there are different ways to the passage; it was from the dinning-room; I went to the pantry; did not see them going to the passage; don't know how long they were there; there was a kind of head-waiter there, Doran; he has lodgings also; Doyle and Kinsella lodged there and myself; I have seen persons about the pantries besides waiters coming to see them; I was in Pat Egleson's on Tuesday morning; I don't think Whalen was then arrested; I know Patrick Egleson; I was not there on Wednesday; I think I would be sorry to to say poor Jim had been arrested; I did explain it was James Whalen I meant; I said nothing about the reward. I said nothing in reference to Doyle giving evidence on the prospect of his getting a large sum of money, nor to Whyte, Rowsel, Golding, nor Egleson. Nothing about 16,000 dollars being given to Doyle, and that he could leave the country, and that it was a large sum. Did not say I would hang my grandfather for it. I got into it from my exclamation, "Good God! it is that man Whalen"; I did not wish to get into the case; I would give two thousand pounds now to get out of it; I merely told
