GOLD FEVER IN OHIO.

Batavia, August 27.—After a ride of [illegible] miles yesterday from the city to the [illegible] of Batavia, at which place I remained [illegible] night, and a drive of three miles this [illegible] I first arrived in Elk Lick Gold [illegible]. I find men from all parts of [illegible] State and also quite a number from [illegible] Kentucky endeavouring to secure [illegible] fortune. "Elk Lick Place" seems to [illegible] adjoining farms. Gold has been found on [illegible] other farms near Batavia, but not [illegible] quantities as on "Elk Lick." I [illegible] some very nice specimens that [illegible] taken out yesterday. It seems to [illegible] almost on the surface. Land has [illegible] a great rise within the past two [illegible]. The "Elk Lick Farm" was pur[illegible] two years ago for $10 per acre, and [illegible] have been bought at $13 per acre [illegible] weeks ago; it cannot now be pur[illegible] for $700 per acre. I witnessed an [illegible] of that kind to day. There have been [illegible] sales sold at $300 and $400 per acre. [illegible] three miles southeast of this place, [illegible] are flocking here by the score, all [illegible] expect soon to become rich. The [illegible] accommodations are very poor; no place [illegible] except under sheds, and a great [illegible] can even secure that. There is to [illegible] hotel erected here immediately, also [illegible] provision stores. Col. W. A. Dal[illegible] of Elk Lick Township, in this county, [illegible] seven men working the "Norris [illegible]." It lies one and a half mile south [illegible] place. He has had twenty-five [illegible] experience in the gold regions of the [illegible]. He seems to be confident of mak[illegible] pay. This gold excitement has [illegible] a great harvest for the Batavians, [illegible] the livery men. Heretofore [illegible] charges were moderate, being but $3 [illegible] for a respectable "rig," which now [illegible] your correspondent $8 per day, and [illegible] impossible to get any at that. Ho[illegible] heretofore $1 per day, is now from [illegible] $5, and very poor at that price. The [illegible] keepers also put on the tariff; ten[illegible] drinks can now be had for twenty-five [illegible] beer fifteen cents per glass. There [illegible] companies at work in this vicinity, [illegible] on Elk Lick Creek, and one on John [illegible] farm, which lies two miles west [illegible] place.

TERRIBLE EARTHQUAKE

The Panama Mercantile Chronicle of Au[illegible] has the following: On the afternoon [illegible] 13th instant, the day previous to the [illegible] of the steamer Callao for Panama, [illegible] 5 o'clock in the afternoon, a most [illegible] shock of an earthquake took place [illegible] Callao and Lima, which lasted several [illegible] and exceeded in intensity and du[illegible] anything that has occurred for many [illegible] on the South Pacific coast.

[illegible] buildings in and around Callao [illegible] to and fro during the earthquake, [illegible] they been constructed of more [illegible] materials the destruction must have [illegible] immense.

[illegible] people of Callao were in momentary [illegible] that the houses would fall over their [illegible] and bury them under the ruins. [illegible] persons were thrown down in the [illegible] by the force of the shock. Almost [illegible] body was seized with a panic. The [illegible] were immediately deserted by their [illegible], who rushed into the streets to [illegible] place of safety. The road to Bella [illegible] was filled with a mass of human be[illegible] men women and children, who fran[illegible] rushed from the scene of disaster. In [illegible] an hour another, but less severe [illegible] of earthquake was felt, which, if any[illegible] increased the terror among the peo[illegible]. About this time, or perhaps a little [illegible] in the evening, the sea suddenly retir[illegible] over one hundred yards, and, rush[illegible] back, rose several feet above its level, [illegible] to the general consternation and [illegible]. This phenomenon was repeated [illegible] times during the night of the 13th. [illegible] of the officers on duty stated that du[illegible] the night the sea rose as high as thirty [illegible]. Many houses near the water front [illegible] have been more or less injured. The build[illegible]gs that have more severely suffered are [illegible] Hotel de Roma and the Marine Hotel. [illegible] such consternation prevailed it was im[illegible]sible to ascertain the damage that was [illegible]. It was known, however, that im[illegible]se quantities of goods had been swept [illegible] by the receding tide, from the water. [illegible] reported that no lives were lost, [illegible] having had time to get out of dan[illegible]

GREAT FEMALE EXCITEMENT.

[illegible] of the sensations of the scientific [illegible] at Norwich seems to have been [illegible] by a lady on Tuesday. The Sec[illegible] Economic Science is hardly the one [illegible] such we should expect a lady to shine, [illegible] Miss Becker took it by storm, and car[illegible] everything before her. The very title [illegible] paper was a challenge. Its subject [illegible] woman's rights and wrongs; but it [illegible] the very word woman, and boldly [illegible] the consideration of "the suppos[illegible]rences in the minds of the two sexes of [illegible]. Miss Becker pleaded for the equality [illegible] two sexes, but she practically assert[illegible] superiority of that "sex of man" to [illegible] she herself belongs. When Miss [illegible] concluded, a member of the other [illegible] of man"—Mr Joseph Payne—naturally [illegible] that, as his turn had come, he [illegible] read his paper; but the crowded [illegible] had been so excited by the vindi[illegible] of the feminine intellect that the [illegible] sex had not a chance. The Section [illegible] not have even hurried extracts from [illegible] Payne's paper; all that it would do [illegible] to discuss Miss Becker. Into this dis[illegible] both "sexes of man" seem to have [illegible] warmly, but it ended in an entire [illegible] of the advocates of feminine inferiority. [illegible] Becker claimed for her own "sex of [illegible] quite equal faculties with the other [illegible] she demanded for it an exactly [illegible] training. She expressed a hope [illegible] the time would soon come when the [illegible] would be as strange in the hand of [illegible] as a spinning-machine is in the [illegible]. But Miss Becker is decidedly [illegible]. Each sex has its sphere, and in its [illegible] is first. That of woman is the affec[illegible] that of man is the reason, and no[illegible] but confusion can come of claiming [illegible] for both sexes in the sphere of [illegible]

[illegible] propeller for canals has been tried at Wil[illegible], Del., and found to work well. It [illegible] miles an hour with very slight dis[illegible] of the water. The wheel is enclosed [illegible], and drives the water towards the bot[illegible]

FENIAN CONVICTS IN AUSTRALIA.

The Cork Examiner publishes an extract from a letter from the Fenian convict Eugene Lombard, in Western Australia. It is dated from West Guildford Road Station, whither the Fenian prisoners have been removed:—

"I was sitting down one morning, about a fortnight ago, enjoying a smoke, and quietly reading 'Gerald Griffin,' by his brother, when we were suddenly ordered to 'fall in' by the warden in charge of us, and come to 'attention.' He read the order to us for our removal, and next morning we were marched to where we are at present in camp, a distance of about sixteen miles from where we were last encamped. I like the change much, and the authorities treat us with more kindness than the others did where we left. The work we are at here is making a timber road forty feet wide—the same road that John Kennedy, Morgan, and the rest of the Cork men are at work on about five miles distant; but they may be as well in Cork or New York as to be only five miles from us, for we are not allowed to exceed a perch more than two hundred yards outside our camp lines. Nevertheless, as a prisoner, I enjoy much happiness, and feel quite contented. This place that we are in is by appearance very lonely—you would imagine that a civilized man never pressed his foot here; however, there are plenty of parrots and cockatoos always chattering to each other; huge mahoganies towering to the sky; gum-trees as thick as grass at home; enough of possums and wallabars (counting game here) and loads of mosquitoes, which almost sting us to death. We manage to keep these away by lighting large fires before our tents at night. I have no news to tell you about myself; there is not the slightest appearance of releasing us—you at home know more about us than we do ourselves. Let the time be long or short, we will live on merrily, and rely on each other for encouragement during our captivity. We always try to cheer each other, crack a joke, and sing a song of love or war when seated together at our camp fire.

The French authorities employ a barbarous method of testing the Chassepot rifle. They tear experimental holes in horses with the bullet, in order to ascertain its effect on living flesh.

Six newspapers are now published at Honolulu, three of them in English and three in the Hawaiian language. The joint sale of the English papers is computed at 2,200, that of the latter at 7,800. There are 600,000 native inhabitants, and about 5,000 foreigners; one newspaper, therefore, for every sixty-five souls.

Canon Girdlestone read a paper to the British Association on the condition of the labourers, whom he described as living on 8s. a week, in crowded cottages, and tied down to the soil. His statements called forth the usual contradictions. Of these the boldest was that of Mr Reed, M. P., who said the labourer got as much as he was worth; and the most important that of Sir Willoughby Jones. The cottagers, he said, must not be prohibited from taking lodgers. If they were, the labourers would be compelled to marry at eighteen merely to get their food cooked and their clothes washed.

The death of old Admiral Wolcott opportunely illustrates the dangers of Parliamentary labours to men of his age (78). He had wisely intended to retire after the next election, and would probably have been alive now if he had abstained from re-entering Parliament in 1865. The old Admiral served at the bombardment of Copenhagen, and was enthusiastically fond of his profession. He has often spoken in the House of Commons, with a tear in his eye and a quivering voice, of his applications to the Admiralty for a ship, and of his "hope deferred" and wasted life on account of want of interest. He was a fine sailor of the old school—kind, warm-hearted, blunt and brave. One speech of his, a good many years ago, elicited a cry of "Order!" from a late speaker, but was characteristic of the man. The late Admiral Napier—"Old Charley," as he was familiarly called—in order to ventilate the subject of naval reform, had made a motion, but could find no seconder. For a moment there was silence, when Admiral Wolcott, who sat on the opposite side of the house, started up and said—"By —— Mr Speaker, it shall never be said that I saw an old brother tar in distress and refused to throw him a tow-rope. I second the motion of the hon. and gallant Admiral." The Speaker looked grave, but the house applauded, and members liked Admiral Walcott the better ever since.

SUPPRESSION OF HOMBURG GAMBLING.—The fiat has gone forth. In five years from this time the "game will be made" no longer—the great gambling establishment of Homburg will be a thing of the past. The town will be obliged to contend on equal terms with other watering-places for its share of the wool on the backs of summer excursionists. For a year after their annexation by Prussia, the Homburgers were allowed to suppose that their "peculiar institution" was indeed superior to fate, to public opinion, and to Prussia; but at the commencement of the present year they were rudely awakened from their dreams of security. The sword that had been hanging over them fell. The directors of the company were ordered to appear before the governor of the town, and they were told that they and all belonging to them were to cease to exist in 1872, and that the following arrangement was to be made respecting the plunder gained until that date. The shareholders were to receive 10 per cent on their money; 5000 shares were to be paid off at par each year, and if this did not absorb all the profits, the surplus was to go towards a fund for keeping up the gardens after the play had ceased. By this means, as there are now 36,000 shares, 25,000 will be paid off at par, and the remaining 11,000 will be represented by the buildings and the land belonging to the company, which it will be at liberty to sell to the highest bidder. Since this decree has been promulgated the Homburgers are in despair. The croupiers and the clerks—the Jews who lend money at high interest, the Christians who let lodgings, all the rogues and swindlers who one way or another make a living out of the play—fill the air with their complaints. They are like the Mormons when their temple was destroyed at Nauvoo, or the Jews when they were driven from the fleshpots of Egypt. They talk of a general emigration to Southern climes. On the shores of the Mediterranean, they have heard, a generous prince is ready to afford them hospitality; and amid the orange and lemon groves of Monaco, they hope to build a new temple, and to ply unmolested their harmless trade.
