CABLE NEWS.

London, September 16.—It is reported here that the speech of the King of Prussia at Kiel excites no animosity in the Prussian Cabinet. The words of the King are regarded as having reference merely to events of 1866, and are not susceptible of application to the present state of things in Europe.

The Moniteur has a tranquillizing leader in which it reviews the relations of the great powers, and considers the situation satisfactory and peaceful.

Paris, September 16.—Bourse heavy; rentes have declined, 68f. to 68f. 75c.

Madrid, September 16.—The official journals concur in declaring that the postponement of recruiting, by order of the Cortes, is a sure sign of peace.

London, Sept. 17.—Telegrams from Yokohama to July 26, announce that active military operations were on foot, but give no details.

Vienna, Sept. 17.—The Emperor reached the military camp of Lannemezan yesterday, where he was enthusiastically received by the troops. A large crowd of citizens welcomed him on his arrival.

Bombay, Sept. 17.—Sheer Ali has been joined by Ameer at Cabool.

Belgrade, September 16.—Reports have been received here that a battle has been fought between the Turkish troops and the Servian insurgents, near Philipopolis. The latter made the attack, but after a desperate fight, they were repulsed, pursued, and driven back to the Balkan mountains. The Turkish loss was heavy; over 200 are reported to have been killed while defending one of the forts assaulted by the rebels. The loss of the latter is unknown.

Malburn, Sept. 17.—Sir Robert Napier has arrived here and received the freedom of the city.

Rio, Sept. 17.—Advices from Rio Janeiro state that the Government of Brazil has protested for the detention of the United States steamer Wasp.

London, Sept. 17.—The Times, this morning contrasts the political canvass in Great Britain with that in the United States. In both cases the electors are new men. Here in England there are many conflicting claims in men and principles, and out of it is a confused hubbub, in which no distinct sound is heard above the rest. The interests therefore, have been peaceful, even dull; but the eight weeks remaining before the election may warm the contest. It is now so quiet. The Times then dwells on the violent animation of the Presidential fight in the United States, and says an American general election an American carnival. The American people may be serious and interested, but they employ the most eccentric and grotesque modes to represent the whole people, and does them some injustice, but less perhaps than is commonly thought.

London, September 18.—Hon. Sir John Young, the present Governor of New South Wales, and ex commissioner of the Ionian Islands, has been named for Governor General of Canada.

London, Sept. 18, 1.20 p.m.—Consols 94⅞ for money; American securities quiet and steady; Illinois quiet at 72; Illinois Central 90½; Erie 42½.

New York Press Despatches.

New York, September 17.—The damage to Mr Bennett's mansion by fire does not exceed $20,000. Insured for $50,000.

Augusta, Maine, September 17.—Official returns from more than three-fourths of the towns of the entire State fully confirm our claim to 20,000 majority. We gain more than 20,000 on last year's majority, and are 10,000 in excess of our average majority for the last twelve years. The total vote is by far the largest ever thrown in Maine.

(Signed) JAMES G. BLAINE,
Chairman State Rep. Com.

New York, September 17.—The Herald's Washington special says a destructive fire occurred in Lynchburg, Virginia, this morning. Seven tobacco warehouses, with their contents, were destroyed.

New York, Sept. 17.—The international cricket match was resumed to-day by the Englands again taking the bat and adding 41 runs before their remaining three wickets were disposed of. The total of their innings footed up 175 runs, and the twenty-two only scored 61 runs, and had to follow their innings, losing 3 wickets for 10 runs when time was called. The attendance was very large and fashionable, many ladies being present. The game will be resumed to-day, and when the twenty-two are out a match will be played between two sides made up by six All Englanders on one side, and five added. The Montreal match takes place next week.

New York, Septemlbe 18, 3 p. m.—The steamers Palmyra and Britannia, from Europe, have arrived.

IMPERIAL LIFE AT FONTAINEBLEAU.

The Empress shows an extraordinary amount of energy just now. It is whispered that half the horses are "tired to death," and that the staff, nearly dead with fatigue, would cry "mercy" if etiquette did not close their mouths. Picnic luncheons, picnic dinners, drives in the morning, in the afternoon and evening, follow each other in quick succession. Her Majesty is indefatigable. She not only scours the forest, but visits every little town and hamlet in the vicinity. The other day the Empress, accompanied by the Prince Imperial and Goltz, darted into the artist village of Barbizon, where the Emperor and Her Majesty left golden souvenirs of their visit to the Exhibition a month or two ago. At the sight of the outriders and the two chocolate coloured breaks drawn by six horses, out flew peasants, artists' wives and children. The postillions drew up before the door of the Maison Jaune, in order that the Empress might admire the new sign which has lately been hung over the portal, and is the combined work of two artistic habitues of the place. As the imperial carriages drove through the beautiful Bas Breau on their way home, more than one artist, camping out under his white umbrella, came forward, palette in hand, to bow. A strange little world is this colony of painters, which has been growing now nearly twenty years, until the "Barbizon school" got to be talked about, but has only cropped prominently into the world's notice within the last two years, since the opening of the Exhibition. Most of the artists' houses are peasants' cottages, which, while retaining their rustic exterior, are furnished with comfort and taste; however, some few picturesque dwellings, with gabled roofs, pink walls, green shutters and verandahs, break the monotony of the village street. The most surprising fact about the place is that this little colony of men following the same occupation, and with no amusements but those that they can find by mixing with one another, manage to live in perfect concord and harmony, criticising each other freely, and judging each other pretty fairly on the whole. To the peasants the artists have ceased to be subjects of wonder, they and their art being both liked and respected. The Emperor himself leads a comparatively sedentary life at Fontainebleau, and his chief "amusement" is to receive the maires of the neighbouring towns and villages. Napoleon III. really displays, on these occasions, a wonderful amount of kindness and good-nature. The other day, a maire of a small hamlet, who had heard how accessible the Emperor is at present, betook himself, dressed in his Sunday clothes and wearing his scarf (the insignia of a maire), to the Palace, where he was fortunate enough to be admitted to the presence of his sovereign in a couple of hours. "Sire," he stammered, "allow me to complain of a stag who every night comes out of the forest, and ruins all the fields of my commune. The animal belongs to the Crown; so I entreat of your Majesty to have him prevented from continuing such disastrous rambles." "How much do you suppose the inhabitants of your village have lost by this?" inquired the Emperor. "Perhaps about—thirty francs, Sire," was the answer. "Well, divide this between them," was the reply; and his Majesty handed over to the overpowered maire a 500f. note; "and remember that I give you free leave to shoot the culprit if you find him again on your grounds." The maire went home in high glee, as you may suppose. The poor stag, having again trespassed, was hunted, killed, and eaten into the bargain, with all manner of rejoicings.

The impression which has got abroad in this region, that General Butler had it all his own way in the recent State Convention of his party at Worcester, is not borne out by an examination of the facts. The chief point of his desire was to secure for Dr G. B. Loring, of Salem, the nomination for Governor. In this he failed utterly, as our readers are already aware, Mr William Claflin being selected as the candidate by acclamation. His other point was to prevent the passing of any resolution in favour of the payment of the five-twenty bonds in specie, and here his failure was no less conspicuous. The resolution which was adopted was the most decided ever produced in any convention, and the vote in its favour was unanimous, not even Gen. Butler himself lifting his voice against it. Instead of gaining prestige at Worcester, the General would seem to have lost; but his failure there, and his failure to get renominated to Congress in the Lowell district, which is announced this morning, must not be taken as proving that he is laid upon the shelf. He is a man of too much vitality and self-assertion to remain long in political obscurity.—N. Y. Sun.

The Bund of Berne publishes the following communication from a Swiss traveller visiting the Furca:—Last Friday evening, about half-past seven, tired and hungry, I approached the hotel situated on the Furca Pass to get shelter for the night. A heavy fog covered the whole neighbourhood, and the weather began to grow sensibly colder. I had travelled that day from Hasli im Hof, over the Grimsel and the ice mountains of the Rhone, and it may easily be imagined that I hastened with a longing desire to reach the hotel. A waiter who stood at the threshold cried out to me, whilst at some distance, "You cannot come in here; the Queen of England has engaged the house for three days." I could scarcely trust my ears at first. "Was it possible," I at last asked, "that the Queen could have engaged the only house on the summit of the pass for herself?" "It is nevertheless true," replied the man, "and you must look out for other quarters for the night." I begged him, as the Queen had engaged all the bedrooms, to allow me to sleep in the saloon, or even on the floor. "I am sorry," he said, "but nobody is allowed to come in here." I asked him, then, if the Queen with her suite had already arrived, and he replied, "No, but there is no doubt that she will be here to-morrow." About this time almost a dozen travellers, one of whom was a lady, had arrived, and looked all very eagerly for a night's rest. When I related what I had just learned their dissatisfaction was extreme. Some of them even tried to force an entrance, but as they were met by her Majesty's cook, ready to resist any intruder, they were forced to continue their way, exhausted and half-starved, to the Realp, where they found a rest, though not without some difficulty for so many. We next day learned that many travellers had met with a similar fate, and everywhere they expressed their feelings strongly at such utter disregard of other people's comfort.
