THE JAPANESE MARTYRDOMS.

We read in the Nagasaki Express:—The five Christians at Nagasaki have, it seems, at last been sentenced to suffer death, and a body of about 150 of them, on the night of the 10th inst., hurried on board the steamer Sir Harry Parkes to be taken out to sea and there drowned. Some 30 more, chiefly women, were to await another Japanese steamer, and suffer the same fate. Directly they heard what was in contemplation, the foreign consuls joint-ly addressed a stirring remonstrance to the Governor, urging him to rescind such an order, but the only reply they received was a recommendation to mind their own business. Another meeting of the consular body for the discussion of this matter, though too late to do anything towards saving the safety of the doomed ones on board the Sir Harry Parkes, was to be held on Saturday, the 11th July. Surely the authorities of Christian nations will by some means or other, be able to bring it within the scope of their duties to prevent such atrocities as these. The Jesuits, we believe, claim some 40,000 converts in Japan; if the slaughter has once commenced, where will it end? Are the whole of these converts to be sacrificed to the fury of their heathen rulers?

TAKING THE VEIL IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A correspondent of the Church News, Sept. 2, sends the following: Last week a very interesting ceremony took place at this house. A young novice took the white veil, and entered upon her duties as consecrated nun of the Benedictine order. The temporary chapel of the convent was full on the occasion, the event exciting great interest among the members of the Third Order of the Congregation. At 4 a procession entered the choir, and the Mass commenced the communion service of the Church of England, which was performed with every adjunct of imposing ritual which primitive ritual could lend to the celebration of the divine mysteries. During the chanting of the creed the young novice who was to receive the veil was led from the outer chapel, accompanied by her bridesmaids.

The postulant was dressed as a bride, with bridal veil and wreath, entirely in white; the little girls who attended her in white dresses over blue skirts. She was then publicly questioned by the Lady Superior, certain psalms and anthems were sung; the novice's habit, scapular, girdle, and sandals; wimple and veil, having been solemnly blessed, the veil was delivered to the bridesmaids. The Lady Superior then sitting on his seat before the altar, in full robes, as Father of the Order, the acolytes having spread a towel before his knees, delivered to him a pair of shears, whereupon the young novice was brought forward, and while the novices' choir sang, "Farewell, thou world of sorrow," and being sung by the sisters, her long fair hair was all cut off, the black long veil falling on the ground around her. The ornaments being taken off, she herself threw them also on the ground in token of her having renounced the vanities of the world. She was then led out by two sisters to put aside her white dress, and soon returned habited in the Benedictine frock. The whole habit was then placed upon her by the Lady Superior, while appropriate prayers and blessings were used. Lastly, after the cowl and wimple were placed on the head, the white veil was solemnly blessed, and consecrated, and then placed over her head. She was immediately led by the Lady Prioress to her stall in the choir, bearing a lighted taper in her hand, until the communion. Having taken the three vows for one year, the service concluded by the choir singing the anthem, "Wise virgin trim your lamp and come, the Bridegroom cometh, He calleth for thee."

The novice then rose and went forward to the altar steps holding her lighted taper, and while she was receiving the sacrament, the choir-curtain fell, and neither she nor the other sisters were seen any more.

The week before last, a nun took the black veil in this house. The ceremonies on that occasion were still more striking and solemn. The Feltham nuns are entirely closed; they never go out; they see visitors at a grating in the convent parlor; their faces are covered. They observe the strict Benedictine rule, and recite the Roman Benedictine office. As their numbers increase it is hoped to establish the perpetual Adoration; at present only a few hours a day are devoted to this purpose. During the watch each nun wears a large red crimson veil over the veil of her head. We also are informed that the nuns intend to receive pupils as soon as the requisite arrangements can be made.

This house is the only strictly cloistered house in the church of England, in which the life of Mary, who chose the better part is altogether led. May the perpetual prayers and intercessions of those sisters be of great blessing to our church! Their prayers are to be specially and frequently offered for the approaching council at Rome, that the Pope may have the boldness to make it indeed ecumenical by inviting the Anglican and Greek bishops to attend, and that so the long-divided divisions of Catholic Christendom may be healed by him who is indeed the Balm of Gilead. All letters desiring information respecting this house should be addressed to the Very Rev. Mother Prioress, Benedictine Priory, Feltham, Middlesex.—English paper.

Travelling in Norway is cheap. A traveller writes:—"At some of the stations we were charged for two persons four marks (twenty-eight cents gold) for supper, beds, and breakfast. A horse and carriole hired at station to station cost about thirty-eight cents gold a Norwegian mile, which is two English miles. On the steamers, a man and his wife travel at a fare and a half."

A court-martial assembled on board Her Majesty's ship Formidable, at Sheerness, on Monday week, to try Captain Lewis J. Jones and Navigating-Lieutenant Francis Cook of Her Majesty's ship Eclipse, charged with losing the said ship to ground off Pelorus Island on the 22nd of July. The court found the charge fully proved, and sentenced both prisoners to be dismissed Her Majesty's ship Eclipse; Navigating-Lieutenant Francis Christian to lose one year's seniority.

DECLINE IN THE CALIFORNIA MINES.

The California State Capital Reporter, speaking of the mines there, says that while the State is rejoicing over its general prosperity and advancement, the fact that a serious decline is going on in the mining localities of the Sierra Nevada, is almost entirely lost sight of. Many of the mining villages which a few years since were the pride of the State, and sending forth their abundant streams of gold, are now almost deserted and going to decay, and carrying with them the surrounding section which had depended upon the mines for their business, or as markets for their produce. When in the height of mining prosperity there was no section of the world happier or more prosperous than the mining country. With gay life, fine buildings, costly public improvements, magnificent canals following the tortuous banks of the deep canyons through many miles, and carrying the waters of rivers to the summits of the ridges; with noble roads crossing by easy grades the loftiest and most precipitous mountains, bridges in vast numbers, which gave evidence of the greatest engineering skill; and the thousands of beautiful homes, where lavish expenditure, pleasant industry, and refined care, exhibiting luxury, comfort, and contentment, gave the mountains attractions of home and business that no other section of the State possessed. Money was easily made, and properly spent; the healthy mountain air gave zest and vigour to life, and the noble forests and grand scenery elevated the feelings, inspired the thoughts, and ennobled the nature of man. Then the slow-moving, poorly-dressed, and hard-working farmers of the valleys were regarded as of a second order, and the lower country deri-ively called the "cow counties." But the tables have been gradually turning in the past seven or eight years, and the prosperity, with the outward signs of wealth and comfort, are transferred to the "cow counties." From every section of the mines we hear complaints of decay, cessation of business, and abandonment. This cessation of business, and the decay, are more apparent from their following so shortly after the high state of prosperity, and may appear greater than real. Like money in the money market, or declines in cities, the retrograde movement in the mines may go far beyond what the actual condition of affairs would take it. It would be folly to abandon property in the mountains because business is not so active as formerly, for it cannot be valueless. The Sierras are yet prolific in resources, and when the feverishness of the very prosperous mining life, or the despondency of the reverses have passed away, a moderate, healthy, and lasting prosperity will return, and the vast section, with its many attractions, which once furnished the happy homes, will furnish them again. When expectations are less, contentment will be greater and business will be resumed. The mines, the forests, the quarries, the soil, the water power, and the attractive scenery calling pleasure and health-seeking tourists, furnish resources sufficient to make a wealthy State. When the people turn their attention to developing these resources in the proper manner, the country upon the mountain slope will again rise in importance. Vineyards, orchards, and mulberry plantations can be cultivated, and such enterprises offer inducements of the most promising order. Let a few of the successes be published to the world, and an industrious and prosperous population will take the place of the despondent one of to-day.

DR. VAUGHAN ON THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH.

The Vicar of Doncaster (the Rev. Dr. Vaughan) preached a sermon on Sunday, having special reference to the position and prospects of the Established Church. He said:—So rapid has been the course of events in late years—I might single out the last ten or the last five, or, quite by exception, the last year of all—that Church people must prepare themselves, I feel sure, for a speedy, a scarcely gradual, demolition of all that has been distinctive, all that has been exceptionally advantageous in their position. It is more than probable that some of my younger hearers this evening may live not only to see what we call the Church of England thrown altogether upon voluntary offerings for its maintenance—in which case some of them may remember in old age this first collection made in the Parish Church of Doncaster for the repairs of its fabric and the expenses of its service—but also to find it at least an open, perhaps a very doubtful, question, to whom shall belong the churches themselves and the glebe houses—whether, indeed, there shall be left to the old Church of England, as we still fondly call it, any vestige of that legal standing which has made her hitherto the calm shelter of her children, the admiring wonder of foreigners, and the mark of obloquy or envy, as the case might be, to thousands of her domestic enemies. I am far from regarding this prospect—be it far off or near—with unmixed alarm or dismay. I never believed that the "Establishment," as such, was Christ's Church in England, or that the withdrawal of the favours of the State would be the putting out in our communion of the Divine Shechinah. It is not so much for the Church that I fear, for I firmly believe Christ's words, "Lo, I am with you always," and doubt that the old, the everlasting benediction is able to repeat itself in many new, many diverse forms. I fear something for the State, when it ceases to have a religion. I fear something for the average tone of religion in our cottages and in our palaces, when there is no longer one form of worship which has upon it the stamp of pedigree and of custom; but for the Church itself I fear not. In so far as the Church of England, so called, has had Christ in her and God with her, she is indestructible and immortal. In so far as she has trusted in outward advantage, and suffered herself, in her priests or her people, to become sluggish, lukewarm, contemptuous, or persecuting—in so far let a change into adversity—God grant it—reform her.

Oxford University, with all its opportunities, and privileges, is now open to any student upon the payment of the entrance fee of five pounds and the yearly payment of three pounds ten.

The Gaulois of Sept. 3, brings strange accusations against Lord Stanley; if we are to believe M. Tarbe, that most rash Foreign Minister has been forming a neutral league promising British protection and territorial guarantee to Italy, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, if these countries will promise to take no part in the coming struggle. M. Tarbe hardly knows how to express his indignation at this meddling policy. After proposing neutrality to Switzerland, Lord Stanley may as well offer the throne of France to Napoleon III.

Application has been made at the Capel street Police office, Dublin, for a warrant at the suit of the guardians of the North Dublin Union, for the arrest of Lieutenant Samuel Ponsonby McCullagh, of the 3rd West India Regiment, at present in England on leave, for having deserted his wife, an inmate of the workhouse for the past eight months.
