AVENGING MURDERS BY BLACKS IN AUSTRALIA.

News from Carpentaria announces the murder of Mr Manson (once inspector of police in Queensland), with a Chinese companion, by the blacks. How the murder was avenged is related by a correspondent of a Brisbane paper as follows:—"I much regret to state that the blacks have become very troublesome about here lately. Within a few miles of this place they speared and cut steaks from the rumps of several horses. As soon as it was known, the native police, under Sub-Inspector Uhr, went out, and, I am informed, succeeded in shooting upwards of thirty blacks. No sooner was this done than a report came in that Mr Manson had been murdered by a black at Biddle and Hetzer's station, near the Norman. Mr Uhr went off immediately in that direction, and his success, I hear, was complete. One mob of fourteen he rounded up, another mob of nine, and a last of eight, he succeeded, with his troopers, in shooting. In the latter lot there was one black who would not die after receiving eighteen or twenty bullets, but a trooper speedily put an end to his existence by smashing in his skull. In the camp of the last lot of blacks Mr Uhr found a compass belonging to Mr Manson, of the Norman, and a revolver belonging to a Chinaman. He then followed the tracks of the sheep Manson and the Chinaman had a short time before passed with, and in a water-hole found the bodies of poor Manson and the Chinaman cut about and mutilated in a most frightful manner. Cannon's body has also been found.—Melbourne Argus.

THE BURNING OF THE STEAMER MELITA AT SEA.

The ship Jacob A. Stamler, Capt. Geo. Sampson, has arrived at New York, bringing a part of the officers and crew of the steamer Melita, burned at sea.

From the officers of the steamer the following particulars have been obtained:

The Melita, 834 tons, left Boston for Liverpool Aug. 30, with 45 officers and crew and 63 steerage passengers, and a cargo of cotton. When seven days out fire was discovered in the forward compartment, which was loaded with cotton, tallow, and wooden ware. The pumps were manned at once and water forced into the compartment, but the most that could be done was to keep the flames from bursting through the deck. The fire was first observed between 12 and 1 o'clock on Saturday morning, Sept. 5.

At about 6 o'clock a.m. the ship J. A. Stamler, bound from Havre to New York, came in sight, and the Melita steamed toward her for assistance.

Captain Sumner of the Melita, requested Captain Sampson to take his passengers and lay by while he tried to save his steamer, which was promptly done. By 10 a.m. the passengers were safe on board the Stamler. All day Saturday, and until Sunday morning at 3 o'clock, every effort was made to smother the fire on the Melita, but to no purpose. At that time it burst through the deck, and the Captain and crew abandoned her and went on board the Stamler.

The burning ship was lost sight of about 1 p.m. on Sunday, Sept. 6.

About two hours before this a bark came in sight, which Capt. Sampson hailed and ordered her captain to wait alongside and take part of his passengers. The captain replied "All right," but at daylight no bark was in sight. Her name could not be ascertained, but only the fact that she was bound from Waterford to Quebec. The officers of both vessels are loud in their declamations of the conduct of the unknown bark, and demand that her captain make an explanation of his failure to render assistance to the sufferers. They use no moderate terms in denouncing such unseamanlike conduct. On the 7th the bark Monequash, from Prince Edward Island to Liverpool, was hailed, and the chief officer and sixteen of the Melita's crew were transferred to her. On the 8th they spoke the ship Karrachee, from Mauritius, bound for Greenock, which took on board thirteen of the crew. The same day the Prussian brig Augusta, from St. John for Newry, took seven of her crew and nine passengers.

The Melita was lost in lon. 28 W., lat. 49, and was about sixteen years old, owned by W Dixon, of Liverpool. The following are her chief officers: Capt. James Sumner, Mr. Gordon, Charles McWhinnie, Second Officer; Roger Barry, Third Officer; Morgan Ewing, Purser.

They praise the conduct of the Stamler, and have handed Capt. Sampson a letter expressing their gratitude for his kindness and fidelity in remaining near the Melita twenty-four hours while attempts were made to save her.

The passengers on board the Stamler went a forlorn appearance, having lost everything, and having been obliged to go on reduced fare for nearly twenty days. To-day those of them who wish can go to Liverpool in the Louisiana, or have their passage money returned. Many of them maintain that it would have been possible to save their baggage, but no efforts were made to do so. The officers and crew brought with them most of their effects; but no charge of neglect can be made against them, as they were engaged in trying to save the ship. Yet the passengers, who have lost their all, were loud in their complaints.

There was no confusion on the Melita when the fire broke out, and the salvation of all was due to the prompt action and coolness of the steamer's officers and crew. The origin of the fire is unknown.

A REPORTER'S PIOUS REQUEST.—At the prayer meeting on Saturday in Allen's dance hall, New York, the following request was made:—

"A reporter of the Sunday Mercury desires the prayers of this Christian gathering. He begs for prayers also for his brother reporters and others.

"Good Christians, pray that Christian grace may touch their hearts, and that the light of Christianity may be let in upon these hitherto benighted Christian staffs."

This meeting appeared moved to an intense degree by such an unexpected manifestation of religious revival, and the Rev. Dr. Van Meter took up a prayer, in which he fervently invoked God, "who now saved the newspaper men of New York from hell only through His extraordinary forbearance," to extend his merciful influence to those "miserable wretches who now mock religion in order to pander to the lowest passions of the people."

DR. VAUGHAN ON THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

(From the Times.)

Dr. Vaughan has been delivering his testimony in the magnificent parish church of Doncaster, lately re-built at an immense cost by the free offerings of the nobility, gentry, and other Church people of Yorkshire. On the whole he prophesies evil things of the Established Church, and we shall certainly offend against the orthodox rule if we prophesy any good things. But there remains a mild course, on which we shall presently insist. Dr Vaughan is a great man. His relations were all of them remarkable in their several ways. His University career was brilliant. After a very brief taste of parochial work under the best auspices he became Head Master of Harrow, in succession to Dr Wordsworth, and raised the school from what it was to what it is. As a matter of course he was put on the Public Schools Commission, and did his duty therein. He is one of the formerly very select, but now increasing, number of men who have refused a bishopric. To gratify a presumed taste for parochial work he was offered, and accepted, the vicarage of Doncaster. We should expose ourselves to the charge of unfairness and rashness if we doubted Dr. Vaughan's fitness to estimate the popular position of the Church of England. He began and he has ended in parochial work, thus returning with a true heart to his first love. But Dr. Vaughan, we repeat, is a great man; he has dwelt in the high places of the earth, among people great in position or in intellect, and among those who seek in the privileges of a high ecclesiastical caste exemption from the drudgery of the profession. Dr. Vaughan would have a place, a dignity, and even a vocation, if there were no such thing as a poor man or a nobleman in the world. Putting the latter out of the question, and dealing now with the vast basis of the social pyramid, Dr. Vaughan has not had to regard the working class in town or in country—as ten thousand of our clergy and many times that number of laymen have had to regard them—that is, actually to see, hear, touch, and feel them as close as fathers, brothers, and sons. This is the true direction for the present inquiry:—What hold has the Church of England on the people that make our food and clothing, and do all the hard work of this vast community? How stands the church with the millions? The millions of this country will eventually govern it, and the Church need fear nothing so long as it stands with them. Dr. Vaughan doubts whether it may reckon with certainty on the possession of its churches, its parsonages, and its glebes, let alone its endowments. It appears to us that, had his speculations gone in the right direction, he would not broached such a misgiving at all, and he would have spared us the ill omen of disjoining the fabrics from the people, or rather assuming that the Church of England might one day be in possession of neither. Let us hear no more of churches, parsonages, and endowments, and ask only whether the Church has the people. There is more in that question than meets a careless eye; because if the Church has not the people, as some ingenious manipulators of returns confidently assert, then, in the presence of that great and fatal loss, we may endure the lessee loss of acres, brick, and stone. There is no use in fretting ourselves about Irish endowment and Irish establishment, because the people for whom they were have gone from us long ago, and will not return. What comfort is there in the empty crib and the idle toy? Why talk of the nursery when the child has gone and the nurse has found employment elsewhere? If the Church people are the great majority, as we believe them to be in spite of some remarkable arguments to the contrary, they will either retain the material belongings or find no difficulty in replacing them. All these points rest with the people themselves. It was the people who came over at the Reformation and founded the Church of England on its present basis. Dr. Vaughan would be the last man to confound the Establishment with the Church, or the putting out of the Divine Shechinah with the withdrawal of State protection. He declares an unwavering faith in the promises, the very terms of which indicate that they are to be fulfilled in a variety of forms, passing human anticipations. His fears and misgivings he freely and candidly confesses to be a looking back to what appears now behind—the picturesque effects, the decorous solemnities, the gentle calm, and the homely consolations of a State religion. He fears that the palace and the cottage may lose somewhat of their tone, now that no particular faith is to claim admission on the score of long pedigree or familiar custom. England no longer awed by authority or trained by sweet use, he fears that a cold scepticism and a Christless education may breed a race without faith, without knowledge, and without hope. What ever the Church of England owes to her present advantageous position—and she cannot but owe much—must go with the wreck when the institutions have foundered in the approaching storm. This particular loss Dr. Vaughan tries to measure and estimate, and for this he sews the tribute of a fond regret. The Church of England will clear itself from that wreck, and pursue its course as a branch of the Catholic Church. We expect more than this, and we beg to offer reasons for our hope. The Church of England is not national because it is established, but established because it is national; and we venture to predict that should it be disestablished by the most violent measures a doubly or trebly reformed Parliament is capable of—aye, if the House of Lords be reformed also—it will still continue the Church of England. To a very great extent, indeed, our large towns and populous districts, the Church of England derives not the slightest perceptible gain from her establishment, while of endowment she often has none. But under those conditions she holds her ground as the national Church—we say advisedly the national Church, for it may be admitted without the least damage to our present purpose that religious inquiry and spiritual excitement more generally lead the persons affected away from the Church of England in the first instance. This we may admit to be the case in the great majority of examples in the higher and lower classes; the higher middle class being, we apprehend, the strongest and best "feeder" of the Church of England. But inquiry must settle at last in some conclusion or other; excitement must wear itself out; and it finally devolves upon the sceptics or the neophytes to choose between one community and another. The Church of England comes in for her full share even of these spiritual waifs and strays. Upon the whole she fares well in the final division of spiritual booty, even though her stiff and ponderous accoutrements unfit her for the rush or the melee. But as she has fared, so will she continue to fare. If changes bring her loss, they will also bring gain. We seem pretty well to measure how much she will lose, but by no means her possible increase of spirit, energy, power, and success. The benefit of a splendid and high titled Establishment is very much confined to places, to classes, to cliques, and to families, to the owners of patronage and the possessors of influence. Of course they will lose something—that is, all they cannot commute into solid cash. But the many, we humbly think, will not lose so much as either the friends or the foes of the Church of England seem to anticipate.

The Germans were originally called "Allemans," or men of all nations. The United States people deserve the name now, being about the greatest admixture of races the world ever saw.

EFFECT OF ADVERTISING.—It is amusing at times to observe the stores of the merchants who don't advertise; to see the anxious proprietors looking into the streets and see the people go by, wondering why they don't come in, while the stores of their neighbours who do advertise are thronged with customers. Some people will learn by observation, others will not.—Daily Palladium.
