ASSEMBLING OF THE LEGISLATIVE BODY AT OTTAWA.

The New York Herald has the following graphic account of the preliminaries attendant upon the opening of the Parliament at Ottawa:

Ottawa, Ont., March 4, 1873.—To-day, some seven hundred miles south of us, you are celebrating the inauguration of General Grant's second term. To-morrow we shall celebrate, with more consequence—though the occasion is of less consequence—the inauguration of the Second Parliament of the Dominion. By way of contrast between the two countries and forms of government which may, respectively, be represented by the stovepipe hat and the cocked hat, the Herald correspondent proposes to give some account of the form and ceremonies which attend on the opening of Parliament in Canada. If the display be somewhat less imposing and more tawdry than that offered to the liege of London when Her Majesty or the Lord Commissioners go in State to the House of Lords, still it is sufficiently out of the common American way to deserve comment and consideration, recalling, as it does in some of its features, the days when Vaudreuil held his court in the Castle of St. Louis, or the ceremonies which attend the installation of Gwynplaine in Victor Hugo's romance.

The old English custom survives in Canada of constantly summoning Parliament. The Official Gazette, the colonial reproduction of the London Gazette, announces, as soon as Parliament has been dissolved or prorogued, that its members are summoned to meet at Ottawa on a certain date, forty days or less distant. This is only a formality, to fulfil some old-fogyish but eminently constitutional provision to prevent the sovereign from usurping authority for a period longer than forty days without the popular consent. When the date set comes round another proclamation is issued, a summons to meet forty days later, and so on till the proclamation reads "for despatch of business," essential words omitted in the merely formal documents.

The members of the Senate are appointed by the Crown "for life or during Her Majesty's pleasure," which is the same thing. The President of the Senate is also appointed, not elected, so that the Senate is always organized, like the English House of Lords. The new President is Hon. Pierre J. O. Chauveau, who succeeds Hon. Joseph Cauchon, appointed in 1867. Mr Cauchon's resignation was for a twofold purpose. His fiery speech and executive ability will be needed by his party in the Commons and in Quebec politics. Mr Chauveau was lately Premier of Quebec, but began to "play out." He is a gentlemanly, cultivated man, was for many years Superintendent and Minister of Education in Quebec, served in the Commons as Speaker, is an ardent Catholic, leaning to Ultramontanism, and a vehement Frenchman.

After a general election, such as that of 1872, the House of Commons reorganizes. Its officers and clerks have practically a life tenure. The successful candidates present the declarations of their returns, signed by the officers to whom the writs were originally directed, generally the sheriffs or registrars. The Clerk then swears them in (the oath of allegiance is the oath administered), they sign the roll and the ceremony is over. Where seats are contested the cases go to the Committee on Contested Elections to be decided by special subcommittees. The Clerk presides over the deliberations of the House till a Speaker has been elected.

The Senate chamber and offices lie to the right as you enter from the great central tower. The room is spacious and lofty, well lighted from the top and particularly showy. The decorations and upholstery are in scarlet. To the left of the President's fauteuil is the throne which reminds an irreverent republican of a gigantic rocking chair in scarlet reps, covered with an overgrown umbrella of the same. A flight of steps leads to this seat, over which are carved the lion and the unicorn fighting for the crown. The throne is a sort of secular Shekinah, a visible symbol of the absent majesty. A smack of England survives in the robes and gowns of the President, clerks and chaplain, and there is a reminiscence of Runnymede in the independent way in which the Senators, covered, hold conferences with the commoners, though the tiles are of silk or straw instead of steel. Except on state occasions no one ever goes to the Senate. The members have abundance of room, there is no one in the galleries but the official reporter, sessions last an hour and all is done.

The Commons chamber, to the left as you enter, is pretty well crowded, galleries and floor. The desks rise gently from the aisle; the fittings are in green, which, with the larger attendance in all parts of the House, give the room a rather gloomy look. There is much order in the arrangements, which conduces to a rapid transaction of business. To the right of the Speaker are the ministerialists, the Premier by himself at the top of the front row, the Ministers and most prominent men at the other front desks, the small fry further back. To the left are the members of "Her Majesty's loyal opposition," a single desk, facing the Premier's, being appropriated to the recognized leader of the party, and the prominent speakers occupying front seats. The advantage of such an arrangement is obvious. Almost all the speaking is done by the men in front two-thirds of the questions asked or amendments proposed come through the leader of the opposition, and the answers in as large a proportion through the Premier. When a speaker on the left has concluded the Speaker turns to the right for a reply, then back to the left for a rebuttal, and so on. The two parties are now led by Sir John A. Macdonald, the Premier, and Mr Alexander McKenzie, of Lambton, who succeeded Hon. John Sandfield McDonald as chief of the opposition on the death of the latter. The new Speaker will probably be Hon. James Cockburn, a conservative, who was formerly Solicitor General under Sir John A. Macdonald, and was elected to the Speakership of the first Parliament in 1867.

The most patent relics of Old World institutions are to be found in the offices of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, and the Usher of the Black Rod of the Senate. The former bears no special badge of office except a silver-hilted sword, worn in a baldric, over a full dress suit. The Commons, however, make up for abstinence in this regard by keeping up the mace, a huge brass wand, triple gilt, surmounted by a crown. This is laid on the table when the House is in session, and borne before the Speaker when he takes his seat or leaves it. That (Oliver Cromwell to the contrary notwithstanding) there is something in the mace appears from the fact that in January, 1873, the Ontario Legislature could not adjourn till the mace-bearer, inadvertently absent, returned to the room, though the motion to adjourn had been adopted. Punctillio worthy of Castile!

The Usher of the Black Rod is the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate. He cuts as old a figure as the wapentake in Hugo. He wears a full court suit of black, dress coat, ruffles, knee-breeches and silk house, a bag wig and cocked hat, buckled pumps and a sword. His wand is of ebony, surmounted by a crown of gold. His agility and dress remind one of a petit maître of the past century at Versailles.

The Viceroy, attended by his staff, all in gorgeous uniform or court dress, drives to the entrance under a salute of artillery. There he is received by a guard of honour. The Usher meets him and ushers him along the lobby to the Senate and into the chamber. As he has to go backwards and bow at each step he makes, and has his cocked hat, his black rod and his sword to look after, this is a matter of some delicacy, difficulty and danger. The present Usher, Mr Kimber, is said to be more proficient than any European rival in cooking the pregnant hinges on his back. The Senate room always looks well on State occasions. Apart from the crowd in the galleries the floor is always filled with ladies in gala costume, and the high dignitaries, English and colonial, officers in decorated uniforms and plumes, Catholic bishops in robes of black and purple, English churchmen with lawn sleeves or crowns and hoods from Oxford or Cambridge, diplomats in full dress, &c., make quite a tableau of the aisle.

After prayer the Viceroy commands the attendance of the Commons. The Usher, standing some distance from the throne, on the steps of which is the Viceroy, bows thrice on receiving the order, backs to the clerk's table, bows thrice, backs to the bar of the House and bows thrice, then proceeds to the Commons chamber, where he knocks to record the locked door and is admitted to parley by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The Commons then march, like so many schoolboys, to the Senate, and after nine more bows from the Usher on the completion of his errand, they are received by the Viceroy and directed to choose a Speaker. They retire to do this, and the city's ceremony is over, and the Governor marches out, preceded by the Usher, as usual, like an exceedingly courteous crab in a court suit. The real opening takes place on the day following. The crowd is greater, but the ceremonies are precisely the same. The Commons come in as noisily as before, headed by the Speaker, who announces his election and demands the privilege of access at all seasons to the presence of the representative of the Sovereign. This is accorded, and the Viceroy proceeds, to read his speech in English and French from the steps of the throne. At its conclusion the Commons withdraw, the Governor departs, preceded by the salaaming Usher, and the crowd disperses. Out we go into the free American air, where sun, sky, snow, fair forests and great hills make one smile at the twopenny pageant we have just witnessed.

No organ of thought or action can be employed without the assistance of the blood, and no organ can be employed safely or with impunity without a supply of healthy blood. With healthy blood the exercised organs become well developed, whether they be mercurial or intellectual. By the use of Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites the blood is speedily vitalized and purified, and so made capable of producing a sound mind and a sound body.

"Persons suffering from impure blood, or whose health is giving way, either in business or those who study closely, will find in the Syrup the material to build them up and the tonic to keep them there." DR. CLARKE.—Adv.

We understand the whooping-cough is quite prevalent in the towns around us, but that no cases have proved fatal. Some families use nothing but Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. Our Doctor, however, says a little ipicac, to produce vomiting would be an advantage.—Adv.

There are more than one thousand different kinds of pills in the United States. Some of them are worthless and injurious, others are good and beneficial. Old Dr. Parsons invented the best anti-bilious pill we ever saw or heard of. They are now sold under the name of Parsons' Purgative Pills.—Adv.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Improve Nutrition.

THE central idea in the treatment of all Chronic Wasting Diseases, resulting in Nervous Prostration and General Debility, is to improve the Digestion and Assimilation of Food, and the formation of Healthy Blood. Dr. Wheeler's Compound Elixir of Phosphates and Calisaya contains the only agents known that act directly as excitants of nutrition, by imparting tone to the Stomach, Liver and Pancreas, the great tripod that prepares nourishment for building up the organs and tissues of the body. The action of this remarkable preparation is extraordinary in strengthening and vitalizing the constitution, whether impaired by age, exhausted by excesses, dissipated habits, or run down by old complaints that have resisted all ordinary methods of treatment.

Being a delicious cordial to take, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances, it is eminently adapted to prostrate, anæmic women and delicate children.
