Handy hacks to help you move

Moving should really be classified as a sport: you need a team, it involves heavy lifting and on game day (moving day) ... hard work in preparation pays off. So, what is the one piece of equipment that is a "must have" for your moving playbook? Tape. Don't just settle for any tape. You need the best gear to ensure success. Here are few tape tips to help you tackle your next move.

It never fails – on moving day you're left with a variety of oversized or awkwardly shaped items. Rather than looking for boxes, get creative by bundling and wrapping them with tape. T-Rex tape is an excellent choice, since it works longer and holds stronger than other utility tapes.

Moving big pieces of furniture can also be a headache. Equally frustrating is locating bungee cords and appliance straps. To make it easy, skip the bungee and opt for T-Rex Brute Force tape to keep doors shut and to secure heavy pieces to the dolly. The intense strength, durability and holding power of the tape will offer you added peace of mind.

Overhead storage in the garage, shed or basement is great until you have to start moving it. If you're using a ladder to access extra storage space, stay in the game and apply tread tape to each ladder rung to provide extra grip and protection from slipping. If you're using a personal truck for the move, you can also adhere a few strips to your truck bed for added foot traction and to prevent boxes from shifting during transit. (NC)
