The Daily News.

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 5.

The Hon. Frank Smith is to be Postmaster General of Canada in place of the Hon. John O'Connor. Mr Smith was born at Richfield, in the county of Armagh, Ireland, in 1821, so that he is now sixty-five years of age. He came to Canada with his father in 1832, and while still a young man embarked in business in London, which he carried on with success from 1849 to 1867, when, to such dimensions has it arrived that he was forced to remove to Toronto and establish his head quarters there. He was Mayor of London in 1866 and was Alderman for several years. He was called to the Senate in 1871. According to a Montreal contemporary the new Postmaster General is a man of extraordinary energy for business. He is also a man of fine physique, and although past sixty years of age is still master of some of the magnificent strength of his younger days. In the Hon. Frank Smith, Canada will find an able and conscientious Postmaster General.

The budget brought down in the Council last night and the Mayor's speech therein are eminently satisfactory, showing that the contemplated necessity of raising the rate of taxation has been avoided. Some additional burdens have been incurred in connection with the Provincial Exhibition and other matters, but these have been provided for amply and a surplus left. This fact is due to two causes. In the first place the increase in assessable value of real estate, due to the general prosperity of the city amounts to $252,905, furnishing $4,000 of additional revenue. Then, again, there being very few vacant houses, a considerable sum will be saved on remissions of taxation. Every patriotic citizen should rejoice at the flourishing condition of affairs thus disclosed. Mayor Gaskin did a manly and consistent act when he declined to accept the salary belonging to his office. It is easy enough to criticise and preach economy to others, but the present Mayor has shown that his utterances are the sincere expression of his opinions, and that he has the stuff in him to act upon his convictions even when such action demands a sacrifice. This circumstance acts off the practical administrative ability displayed by the Mayor to advantage.

A FEW SUGGESTIVE FIGURES.

The revenue and expenditure of an individual are the best test of his condition, and the prosperity or otherwise of a country may be ascertained in the same manner. A few suggestive figures will make it apparent that the stewardship of the Conservative party has been eminently satisfactory while that of their opponents has been the reverse. Between 1867 and 1873 the administration of Sir John Macdonald were compiling the confederation of British North America by taking British Columbia and Prince Edward Island into the union, purchasing the Northwest territories, and assuming the debts of the old provinces of Upper and Lower Canada. This was not done without expense, and we find that the expenditure rose from a little over thirteen millions to over nineteen millions during the period mentioned; and that the increment was able out of its splendid revenues to lay aside something every year, and in the six years a surplus of $10,186,200 was amassed. During the five following years when Sir Richard Cartwright had the control of the public purse and the management of the national finances, the expenditure increased notwithstanding the terrible depression of trade and tried promises that it would be reduced, and deficits of $7,000,000 were incurred. The Conservatives were again called to power by the electorate in 1878, they have discovered that although Grits are strong in promising, Conservative Government is far superior in performance. Again the proportion between revenue and expenditure has been restricted, and more than restored, and during the three years ending 1882 3 a surplus of $11,500,000 will have been laid up. That portion of the surplus, which has already been devoted to sinking fund purposes, has been used to reduce the interest upon a portion of the public debt and to pay a portion of the C. P. R. subsidy. So much for the revenue and expenditure now for the public debt. The mere statement that during the first Conservative administration the burden of debt was increased on an average by only $1,452, that during the first five years the increase averaged $7,117,100, and that during the past three years it has been annually $6,017,537 is sufficient to show which party is the more prudent and economical. Finally, Sir Richard Cartwright has furnished the best testimony to the wisdom of the outlaws of the Conservative Government in his speeches to the London money lenders in 1878 in which he said :—"The whole of the debt has been incurred for legitimate objects of public utility. * * The indirect advantage from those public works has already been found in the remarkable rapidity with which the commerce and the material prosperity of the Dominion have been developed; while a substantial increase in the direct returns may fairly be expected from the improvements now in progress, and to follow the steady progress of population and trade.

WHITTAKER'S CASE.

Ex Cadet Whittaker is lacturing in different cities in the United States, and, if his tale be true, it is sufficient to bring the blush of shame to the cheek of any citizen of that land which makes "Liberty, equality and fraternity" its subjects of its brag. He is described by the Buffalo Courier as "a quiet, gentlemanly young fellow, whiter than a great many white men in appearance, and with nothing to indicate his African origin beyond his highly curled, short cut hair. His hands are white, his neck and wrists are creamy in tint, his feet are small and shapely, and he dresses in a quiet, neat style. His speech is modestly polished, and he attempts neither self glorification nor self depreciation. He seems to be a self respecting young fellow, with a decent element of pluck in him, and the spirit that will make a man of him." He denounces the cadets' treatment of him as unmanly persecution, and says that the instructors had not the moral courage to frown down this persecution, but gave it their tacit support. For four years this young man sat at table with twenty two other men, and not a word was spoken to him. There were men there who would not do him the common courtesy of passing him a dish. Of the fifty officers of the academy there was but one to say a kind word or help him in his lonely career. He concludes with that time as of he were upon a desert island. The West Point cadets are among those who assume to be the flower of American civilization. In the face of such astonishing facts prejudice what alacrity it is for Americans to cast reproach upon British manners and administration. The letters are the outcome of hot tempers and are going with time. American manliness has no such justification.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The Grit editors want the dirty taken off Julius rubber, that being the new method by which their campaign lies are made.

The readers of the Whig are being treated to copious texts selected from the Newspapers of Kingston, a considerable vein of venom is poured out on them.

The Grits are getting flurried.

I think we will really have to throw the Jesuits overboard.

The bland countenances of the solid old Grit lieutenants are beginning to lengthen like afternoon shadows. The old schemes, "coming events cast their shadows before."

One thing that deters many who formerly supported Mr Gunn is the knowledge that even if he were elected he would only be a member of a corporal's guard of Grits in opposition.

We cannot insist too strongly upon our friends meeting around with calmly every issue now till the victory is won. Success depends upon individual zeal, and many a good cause has been lost through over-confidence and negligence.

Hamilton Spectator :—The Grits are predicting that Canadian workmen are in great danger of competition from Chinese cheap labour. The course shows that most of the lucky members there are exactly of Chinamen. That will be about one to do the washing for each Grit who will sit in the next Parliament.

The Grit funeral will take place two weeks from to-day. Mr Gunn will be one of the chief mourners, but he will be ably assisted by Messrs Aylesworth, Allison, Ashley, Cox, and Britton. Friends and acquaintances in other parts of the country will not be able to be present, they will have employment for their tears at home.

"A far-seeing manufacturer in what the Grit Reformer calls Mr Clayton Slater, of Brantford, the man who said at Paris that it would be better for the country if the mechanics were all in the poorhouse, then to participate the National Policy. If Mr Slater can see as far as the 30th of June, he will see a demonstration among the poor house party.

The Almonte Gazette reports of North Lanark, that "from all parts of the riding most satisfactory accounts are being received, and there is not the slightest doubt but that, with good earnest work for the next three weeks, the Conservatives will be able to return Mr Jamieson by a very handsome majority. At the west end of the riding, we are told that Mr Jamieson will more than hold his former vote, in the centre he will make large gains, while Mr Fitzpatrick Huntley will give a large Conservative majority.

A Tony Swindler

New York, June 6—Franklin J. Moses, ex Governor of South Carolina, pleaded guilty to day to petty larceny. He was sentenced to the penitentiary for six months. He was indicted for obtaining, under false representations, $32 from Dr Nathan Bozeman. It is said that he swindled a number of gentlemen here and in Brooklyn.

Mr James O Neeile, the general import and export agent of the Allan Line, and a general Dominion shipping agent, of 526 Lachevotier street, Montreal, Canada, says: "While on a late lacrosse exhibition trip to the States, my wife was taken down with the cholera morbus, and gave me a rough scare. Having read the endorsement of well known people who had used St. Jacobs Oil I determined to give it a trial. In two weeks time I was as well as ever, and fully able to attend to my business.

GARIBALDI.

THE MAYOR'S SALARY

Will be Handed over to the Charitable Institutions of the City

Last night, when the discussion upon salaries came up, the Mayor said that he stood in such a position that he did not want a salary from the city for performing some of his duties. However, if the Council, in their wisdom, saw fit to make him the usual grant, he would hand the amount, whatever it might be, over to the charitable institutions of the city. He did not intend to receive one dollar for his own benefit.

Ald Allan: I am sorry to hear the Mayor speak as he did in that manner. I do not exactly agree with his views. I think he should give the poor, not out of his salary, but out of his pocket.

The Mayor: I am doing that every day, and I will give my salary too.

Ald Allan: I do not dispute you Mr Mayor.

The Mayor: Any man who cannot occupy the chair for the honour of the position, should not occupy it at all. I do not care a d—n for the salary.

Ald Allan—I have no doubt that the Mayor will uphold the dignity of the chair. If I were Mayor which I do not, I would not uphold the dignity of the position. I do not refer to courtesy, but very often female come from a distance to see the Mayor, and it would be a reproach to Toronto if the Mayor should not be polite. Great may come in the city, when he would have to be given the very best the land can afford. $200 does not amount to a row of pins with the Mayor.

The Mayor—There is not a day but I give away $2, and very often more.

Ald. Allan—I have no doubt of it. If you could afford it, I think you should not be Mayor. If any poor person come to me for help, I may go to the Mayor. I have no doubt you do your duty. I do not wish to interfere with the money. It is the greatest pleasure I want a share in the distribution of the daughter. There are little things that we should hate, and the Mayor should assist us.

The Mayor: Come down.

Ald Allen: I am sorry that I cannot suppose the chair. I am sorry that I cannot come up again.

Ald McMahon: Ald Allen is right.

Ald Allen: Ald Bland's department is the money will be used.

The matter then dropped.

Harcourt in the House.

London, June 5—In the House of commons, last night, Harcourt stated that the Irish Government had received information from a private source, the Crime Prevention Association, which was a secret society, that would necessarily deal with the Irish question, and an movement demonstration from the Irish benches. He (Harcourt) was informed with advertising Russ for his own purposes. He said that Russ's paper would have been delivered on Saturday if Harcourt had refrained from making these attacks. He said that Russ's paper was delayed by a number of reasons, and that Russ's paper would be delivered on Saturday. Harcourt laughed heartily. Harcourt showed that Russ had by his early delivery of the paper on the treasury bench.

Harcourt consented to insert in the Reprosecution bill provisions assuring prompt trial, causing the judges for a special court to be appointed by ballot instead of being appointed, and obliging the judges to state their reasons for conviction in writing.
