The Alaska Herald, a semi-monthly published at San Francisco, but having a wide circulation in Siberia, Japan, China, the Sandwich Islands and Alaska territory, is printed half in English and half in Russian.

A LUNAR VOLCANO IN ACTIVE ERUPTION.

We give our readers the latest item of news from the satellite which accompanies our earth in its orbit around the sun. It is nothing less than the disappearance or a nearly total change in the appearance of one of the many volcanic craters which cover the surface of the moon. It was the crater which was measured seven times in 1831 by Prof. Maedler, at Bonn, and received the name of Linnæus, by which it is designated on stelenographic charts. It is situated on the point of the moon in longitude east 11 deg., 32 min., 28 sec., and latitude north 27 deg., 47 min., 18 sec.

This crater is described as a very deep precipice, without a mound in the centre, but surrounded by a high, circular rampart, which threw a remarkably sharp shadow in the depths of the crater-like precipice. The whole was surrounded on all sides by that homogeneous grey or green lake, to which Mr Riccioli gave the name of Mare Serenitatis.

The first change in the appearance of Linnæus was observed by Prof. Schmidt, the director of the Observatory of Athens, in Greece. He notified his colleagues of the Observatory in Vienna, that one of the craters of the moon had disappeared. His observation was in part corroborated by some of the best Italian astronomers, Mr Angelo Sachi, of Rome, and Pietro Tachini, of Palermo; but the most detailed reports came from Mr William Birt, a private astronomer, who now lives at his villa, near Walthamslow, in England. He described the present depth of the crater of Linæus as considerably less than formerly with a little mound in the centre, and the whole surrounded by a large whitish field of an irregular shape. The cause of this change is attributed by Prof. Schmidt, at Athens, to a great eruption similar to those which originally must have formed the surface of the moon. It cannot be a gaseous eruption, for gas escapes upward and does not leave any vestige behind it. It must have been a fluid melted mass, which came out in such quantities that it not only filled the crater, but overflowed also the rampart, and changed its colour after it became dry and solid. We therefore are not permitted to think it a volcano like Etna, or Vesuvius, but one like Maccalba or some of the other mud volcanoes of the islands of Sicily. In making comparisons one should not, however, forget that the gravitation is six times and a half lighter on the moon than on the earth.

The Ecclesiastical Court of the Episcopal Church, which met in Providence, Rhode Island, some time ago, to try the Rev. John P. Hubbard, on a charge of permitting a Baptist minister to read the service and preach to his congregation, has just rendered a verdict of acquittal. One of three clergymen composing the Court dissents, but the other two unite in saying that Mr Hubbard's conduct does not constitute a violation of the canon, though they seem, from their published opinion, to think him morally guilty of not conforming to the spirit of his ordinary vows, and intimate that, under the recent amendments to the canon, he might be held liable to discipline for that offence.

The numerous friends of Mr Fred. Benson, and especially his fellow-pupils at Upper Canada College, will be pleased to hear that, after the late examination at Sandhurst, Mr Benson was called on to put a battalion through its movements, in presence of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, by whom he was very highly complimented. At the close of the proceedings, Mr Benson was called to the front, and presented by the Duke in person with a sword and sword knot, for his proficiency and general good conduct. Mr Benson was also awarded a commission without purchase, with choice of service and regiment, and has, we believe, selected to serve in a distinguished cavalry regiment, at present stationed in India. It is quite evident from Mr Benson's brilliant success, and from the position invariably attained by our young fellow-countrymen in every examination which they may have to pass, that Canada offers her sons advantages of education and a training at any rate equal to what is offered in any other part of the Empire.

The sale of the Duke of Norfolk's Church livings, which took place in the Auction Mart, in Tokenhouse Yard, on the 15th ult., excited very great interest. The sale was made by the trustees of the young Duke of Norfolk, who thought it well that the transfers should be settled before he attains his majority, on the 27th instant, as he, being a member of the Romish Church, would be unable to present to them. Very strong doubts were openly expressed as to the desirability of investing in Church property, and there seemed more speculation as to the effect which the present state of Church affairs would have on the market value of these livings than there proved to be in the livings themselves, some of which were withdrawn without a single bid being made, while the offers for others were deemed quite inadequate. "I'll give £100" was the only response to the appeal of the auctioneer, on behalf of the vicarage of St. Margaret's, Ilkets Hall, worth £204 a year, subject to the life of the incumbent, who was "baptized on the 24th of August, 1820." Inquiry was made of the auctioneer as to who would bear the loss should confiscation of church property take place before the next presentation could be made; to which the reply was that it would fall to the purchaser, but that he thought the Legislature of this great nation would never adopt such a course. The auctioneer's opinion, however, seemed to be very doubtingly received, one gentleman remarking that he had a son in the Church in Ireland who would probably soon return to this country a beggar.

The French imitations of English "lecturing" are becoming so popular, under the name of "Conferences," that the institution would really seem to be taking root here. Among the most popular of these "Conferences," are the series of lectures given by M. H. Chavee, the accomplished philologist, on Oriental languages and literature; and those on Astronomy, by the eminent young savant, Camille Flammarion, who seems to have inherited the mantles of Herschel and Laplace, and who was admitted to the Board of the Paris Observatory when only sixteen. A small entrance fee is taken at these lectures, which are usually crowded, and to which hundreds of applicants are unable to obtain admission for want of room. The lectures at the Observatory, at the Sorbonne, the College de France, &c., are as popular, and as densely crowded as those which are solely the result of private enterpeses. Those which are illustrated by diagrams, pictures, or experiments are always the most in favour. The present able and enlightened Minister of Public Instruction, M. Duruy, has done his utmost to foster this new-born inclination of the Parisians to turn their attention to something more serious than the prevailing follies of this particular region.—Paris letter.
