Few of the London theatres produced pantomimes during the Christmas season, that the Spectator says the change is a curious one, and argues that the people are growing unconsciously less childish.

The Humboldt (Cal.) Register says that the bitter rivalry between the Central and Union Pacific railroad companies continues to widen and deepen, and finally results in the building two roads, instead of one, across the continent, the people will have great cause to be thankful. Competition is what they want, above all. If the Union Pacific attempt to pass into the Pacific with an independent line, the Central Pacific will find the means of preservation in an independent line by way of St Louis.

King Louis of Bavaria has gone to Russia to wed the Princess Mary, whom the Emperor Alexander has permitted to become a Roman Catholic. In this unprecedented concession for a member of the royal family of Russia the Roman Catholic journals of Europe see a hope, not only of better treatment for Roman Catholics in the Russian Empire, and especially Poland, but a possibility that this good conduct of the Emperor will merit for him that spiritual illumination which will enable him to see the errors of his schism."

The Baltimore American of the 16th inst. says: "The British barkentine 'Cornucopia,' Joseph Fowles, master, which arrived at this port a few days since from Arroyo, loaded with railroad iron, was the scene of a very extraordinary occurrence during the passage out. A man named John Montgomery shipped as a cook, and performed all his duties until the morning of the 12th of November last, when he was suddenly missing. The vessel was at midsea, and after an unavailing search for the missing man, it was concluded that he had fallen overboard at night and had been drowned. Early on the morning of the 26th inst. the mate heard groans proceeding from the hold, and after a search found the supposed dead man, John Montgomery, secreted in a small space between the rows of iron, where he had remained for thirteen days and eleven hours, having during that time tasted neither food nor drink. His appearance when found was nearly in the extreme: exceedingly emaciated, with pallid face and glassy, staring eyes, he more resembled a skeleton than a living man. He was also covered with vermin, and could have sustained his horrible condition but for a short time longer. After being taken up and fed with nourishing food he somewhat recovered, but even at this time is stupefied and weak. He refused to give any reason for his concealment, but it is supposed that it was done for the purpose of skulking from duty."

THE FIRE AND LOSS OF LIFE AT RIVIERE DU LOUP.

The following further particulars of this melancholy accident were brought to the city by Mr Gauvin, the mail conductor, who came up by the evening train of Friday:—The fire originated in the lower story of Marchand's Hotel, and was caused by an overheated stove passing through one of the partitions. It was discovered by Mr Drolet, book-keeper in Messrs. Archer & Leduc's establishment in this city, who slept in the wing in rear on the ground flat. He gave the alarm, and had barely time to escape with his life. In getting out through one of the windows his hands were much cut.

Mr Wallace slept on the second story, and had been playing whist during the evening. It is supposed the poor gentleman was suffocated while endeavouring to get down stairs. His body was found with one hand under his head, and the legs nearly burnt off.

Mr Marchand's three children, who also perished, are the eldest of his family—a boy 9 years old, and two girls of about 7 and 6 years respectively. The boy had got out with his mother, but went back to try and save his little sisters, and they all shared the same fate. Portions of their bodies have been discovered.

The house being a thin wooden frame one, the flames extended with terrible rapidity, and the whole place was burnt down in about half an hour. There were in all 17 persons in the hotel at the time, who had barely time to escape with their lives, and to rush out on a fearfully cold night in their night clothes. Mr Johnson, connected with the Intercolonial survey, and a great friend of Mr Wallace's, had his hair burnt, and received other injuries.

There was no insurance on the property.

The coroner was to hold an inquest upon the remains at Riviere du Loup on Friday evening, and it is expected that Mr Wallace's body will be interred in Rimouski, his native parish.

The hotel was situated near the Grand Trunk station. Mr Marchand was in town on his way to Montreal when he received the sad intelligence.—Quebec Gazette.

CONFESSION OF MURDER AFTER A LAPSE OF 17 YEARS.

The following account of a mysterious murder, committed seventeen years ago, and the recent discovery of the murderer, is given by the London Daily News.

The lapse of seventeen years and a half has not erased from the recollection of the inhabitants of the city of Norwich the frightful sensation which they experienced in the year of the Great Exhibition. On Saturday, the 21st of June, 1851, a young man named Johnson was out walking in a lane about a mile from Norwich, accompanied by his dog. The dog was ranging a neighbouring plantation, and found there a piece of carrion, which he brought out on the road, and with which he immediately ran home. On Johnson's arrival at home he was horrified to see that the piece of flesh the animal had found was a human hand. He at once gave notice to the police, and the plantation was thoroughly searched, and several other pieces of flesh were found. On the next day, Sunday, a foot was found in the plantation, and some of the vertebræ were discovered hidden in a sawpit. A black striped waistcoat, some cotton waste, such as is used in cleaning machinery, but smeared with blood, and a roller such as is used by the Norwich weavers were also found.

On succeeding days other parts were discovered—now in a field on one side of the town, then in an entirely opposite direction; and at length the whole district was searched, the rivers were dragged, and small pieces of human flesh, evidently carved in slices from a body, were found almost everywhere. Eight days after the first discovery, portions of the viscera were found in a sewer, cut up into pieces three inches long; the pelvis had been previously discovered, a leg bone picked up, and a black velvet bonnet, which had evidently been the property of a person in respectable circumstances, found in the Yare. On one occasion parts of the body were found in spots which had previously been carefully searched—and it was evident that they had been placed there since the first discovery. Some of the pieces had been soaked in water; traces of deodorising liquid were found in others, and, though no part of the body could be restored sufficiently to allow of an inquest being held, many of the scattered parts thus brought together again fitted sufficiently to show that they had formed portions of one organization. It was said by the doctors that the body was that of a female from sixteen to twenty-six, that she had been dead a fortnight, and that she was in good health when death seized her. It was concluded by the police and by the public that a murder had been committed; that the murderer had taken this strange method of disposing of the body bit by bit, and that he was actually at his work still disposing of it in out-of-the-way places after the discovery had been made, and while the search was diligently going on.

The authorities were convinced that a murder had been committed, and, as usual in such cases, they received numerous applications and inquiries from persons whose friends were missing, but they entirely failed either to identify the body or discover a trace of the murderer. At one period of the investigations a young man, who had been heard to make a mysterious observation on the murder, was arrested as an accessory; but the evidence against him amounted to nothing and he was discharged, though the police kept a watchful eye upon him till they, in common with the public, forgot that matter. The public were not long in forgetting it.

The authorities, however, believing that "murder will out," kept the evidences of the crime in spirits of wine, that they might be forthcoming whenever they might be wanted. It was believed that a murder had been committed, and that a young woman was the victim; but only one thing was held to be satisfactorily proved, and that was that the murdered female was not an inhabitant of Norwich at the time of her decease.

Seventeen years and a half passed by, and not a ray of light had been thrown upon the mystery up to Saturday last. On that day a telegram from London informed the Norwich magistrates that a respectable inhabitant of their city had made a voluntary confession that he had murdered his wife on the 15th of June, 1851, by cutting her throat; that the body was cut up, and some portions preserved in spirits; and that they would know all about it in Norwich. This precisely tallies with the facts of the half forgotten mystery. The date is six days before the first discovery of the hand by Mr Johnson's dog, and accords singularly with the guess which the medical men made during the succeeding week as to the time which had elapsed since the body was alive and healthy.

It is at once admitted by those who were concerned in the investigation that nobody suspected Sheward. A quiet inoffensive and respectable citizen, he was going about among them, actually disposing of the mangled pieces of his wife's body, while they were discussing what the frightful mystery could mean. How it came about that the disappearence of Mrs Sheward was never marked, or that being marked, it was satisfactorily accounted for to her friends and neighbours does not yet appear. At the time he seems to have given out that she had gone on a journey, and to have been believed at once. But how did he account for her non-reutrn? Did he give it out that she had died on her journey, or that she had made one of those sensational disappearances of which we often hear? He seems at any rate to have lived free from all suspicion, and as he spoke of this victim as his first wife, it is to be presumed that he had even married again, and carried his frightful secret all through the festivals of a bridal.

How it was that nobody ever put together the two facts of Mrs Sheward's disappearance and the finding of a female body, and how the authorites arrived at the misleading certainty that nobody living in Norwich had been slain, remain to be seen. A respectable woman certainly disappeared just at the time that the remains of one were found; it was understood that her husband said she was gone on a long journey, and he was believed. She never came back, and no inquiry was made, but whatever tale her husband told was again taken on trust; and it now turns out that the husband was the murderer for whom the police were searching, and that the hideous relics in their hands were all that remained of one who had been their neighbour and friend.

UNEQUALLY YOKED.—Yesterday, in the Place d'Armes square, considerable interest was manifested by a crowd of passers-by, attracted by the appearance of a "happy couple" who were making their exit from the French Church, where they had just pledged their mutual vows at the altar of Hymen. The bride was apparently in her teens, while the groom was a venerable gentleman with white locks, and whose age might be on the shady side of three score and ten. They were accompanied by several friends, and all drove off in their sleighs amidst the cheers of the spectators.—Montreal Witness.

In Edinburgh, Dr Charteris, of Glasgow, has succeeded to the late Dr. Lee in the chair of Biblical criticism, and Dr. Calderwood, a United Presbyterian minister of the same city, has taken the late Professor MacDougal's chair of Moral Philosophy and Political Economy. In the college of the Free Church, Dr. Blaikie, of Edinburgh, has succeeded Dr. Bannerman as teacher of Apologetical and Pastoral Theology; and Mr McGregor, of Paisley, has succeded Dr. Buchanan as giving instructions in Systematic Theology. Sir Alexander Grant, of Bombay, has taken the late Sir David Brewster's Principalship.

The Viceroy of Egypt has sent one of his sons to Paris to "complete his education," and another to England for the same purpose. It seems that the practice of economy does not enter into the Egyptian Sovereign's notions of instruction, for the young Prince located at Paris has been allowed to hire for himself an entire mansion in one of the first quarters, at a very high rent, though it is the custom there, even for wealthy people, to content themselves with "apartments." The Prince has also been allowed to spend between £2,000 and £3,000 in decorating the interior. He is now engaged in buying furniture for it, and what his notion of the furniture needed is may be judged from the fact that he has given £800 for a single carpet. In his stables he has already placed twelve horses, Arab or thorough bred English, and numerous carriages of different kinds, and though wine drinking is prohibited to the disciples of Mahomet, he is having his cellar stocked with the very best, and consequently the most costly wines.

As far as ordinances can effect such a purpose, all the civil servants of the British Crown must either live within their means or resign their profession, an order to this effect having recently been promulgated. The employes are not hereafter to be allowed to resort to accommodation bills to meet their extravagances. If a man receives a salary he must live upon it or eke it out from his private fortune, but he must not borrow of money lenders if he wishes to retain his position. This may appear as interfering with a man's right to ruin himself which every Englishman imagines was guaranteed to him by the Magna Charta, but there is great wisdom in such a regulation. It will keep spendthrifts out of public employment and it will be a safeguard to protect the higher interests of the State.

A most successful and wonderful Invention!

New Method of Washing Clothes without Labour!

THE DOMINION

Steam Washing Boiler.

R. J. REID, Inventor & Patentee.

THIS Machine operates upon purely scientific principles. It is self-acting and dispenses entirely with labour and the wear of clothes. The hot suds and steam, by the action of fire, are driven up through the chambers, poured upon the clothes, and forced through the fabric with astonishing rapidity, cleansing it perfectly without rubbing. It has been thoroughly tested, and pronounced unequalled as a clothes washer by those who have used it. All fabrics, from the finest laces to the best blankets, can be washed perfectly and with ease, without the wash-board. For flannels it is invaluable, as the rubbing, rolling, and pressing process must necessarily full them more or less. It is truly a labour and clothes-saving invention. Washing will no longer be a hardship, and washing day a terror and dread to housewives. The invention can be used in any boiler, and the low price of the article, $4, places it within the reach of every family.
