DRUNKEN WIVES.

Mr Richards has held an inquest at the King's Head, Great Mitchell-street, St. Luke's, on Catherine Anna Wright, aged thirty-six years. Geo. Wright, a carman, living at 20, Norman street, said that the deceased was his wife. For the last two years she had been given to drink. She had been drinking rum and brandy since Christmas. She had not been sober for a single hour since then. Coroner: Did you drive her to drink? Witness: No. I never beat her; all I did was to use hard words when she got drunk. Coroner: Why did you give her the money to get drunk? In old times when a husband found his wife getting drunk he locked her up in a room and fed her on bread and water until she got sober. In Scotland there is, it is said, an island where drunken wives are landed, and all that they are left by their husbands is a loaf of bread and a pitcher of cold water. A juror: If that island was near London it would be thickly populated. The witness said that he only give his wife money when she promised not to drink, and she always promised that. On Wednesday he found her lying drunk under the bed. She died on Thursday. Dr. Syson said that the deceased had expired from effusion of serum on the brain, accelerated by alcoholic poisoning. Edward Richmond, the landlord of the deceased, said that he had frequently seen her drunk. Her husband was always kind to her. The Coroner said that it was lamentable to see the home of a steady man rendered miserable and broken up by the habits of a drunken wife. There was only one way of reclaiming such a person, and that was by withholding cash from her until she got sober, and then reasoning with her, and with kindness she would come round. The jury returned a verdict of "Death from excessive drinking."

THE SCENE AT THE OPENING OF THE FRENCH CHAMBERS.

The brilliant sunshine which had lighted up the scene of several successive openings of the Chambers failed on Monday afternoon. We had a dull murky sky as a background, and mud and slush as the foreground of a picture which annually attracts the world of gapers and gamins within the magnificent quadrangle of the Louvre and Tuileries. The uninitiated imagine that the possession of their ticket of admission secures their seats, and therefore arrive shortly before twelve, but those who have graduated in these ceremonies have learnt by experienced that the saying, "First come, first served," was never more realized than on these occasions. The experienced drive up to the Pavillon Denon, beneath the shelter of the crimson and gold marquee erected for the ceremony, as early as half-past ten. The ground is kept by the Garde Nationale, and order enforced by strong bodies of sergents-de-ville. The sight is, in general, exceedingly gay; the splendid equipages of princes of the Imperial family and of the Ministers generally have an imposing effect; the brilliant liveries, the quaint costumes of the Chasseurs and servants of foreign ambassadors, when illuminated even by a winter sun, produce an enlivening influence on the dullest nature. But threatening clouds, raw cold, and a quasi fog are eminently disheartening elements and by no means cheerful. It was, therefore, in a moody frame of mine I followed the queue already formed in one of the galleries, lined with men of the Garde Imperiale, until arrested in our onward progress par ordre supérieur. We stand about half an hour, till released by brown velvet and gold-embroidered coated maitres des ceremonies, who appear at the foot of the staircase, and in courteous tones, addressed chiefly to feminine impatience, implore us to give up our cards quietly, assuring their audience that there is time still to spare. The ladies are willing enough to listen, but once released no pack of schoolboys ever rushed up staircases or flew along galleries at the pace at which they, in magnificent attire, did this day, till they reach the entrance of the Salle des Etats, situated in the middle of the grand galleries of the Louvre. To the fair sex are allotted all the front seats, both beneath the galleries and in those favoured upper regions. And now let me protest against the dark colours selected this year by the fair sex for their adornment. Were I Chamberlain an edict compelling all ladies attending the Ouverture des Chambres to appear in light and bright colours should at once be promulgated for the sake of the coup d'œil, the splendour of which this day entirely depended on the varied colours of the uniforms, the scarlet robes of the Cour de Cassation, Cour Imperial &c., &c., and not, as usual, on feminine costume. The cuirasses of the Cent Gardes, their white and scarlet plumes, their burnished helmets, dressed in line around the dark velvet-draped dais, form an admirable frame for the brilliant colours massed on the platform and steps leading to the throne. Cardinals Bonnechose and Donnet, in their red silk cassocks and scarlet hats, were amongst the first to take their seats on the bench allotted to them. Admiral Charnier, in the dark blue gold uniform of his rank, crossed by the broad red ribbon of the Legion d'Honneur, spoke to them, whilst the stalwart figure of Count Nieuerkerque, in the scarlet and gold dress of Surintendant, crossed by the green ribbon of St. Maurice and St. Lazare, and M. Baroche, in the blue and gold costume of a Cabinet Minister, joined the group. The senators, in their full dress of blue and gold, white waistcoats, and white-plumed cocked hats; the deputies, in a milder cope of the same costume; the scarlet-robed and black velvet-hatted judges, and presidents of councils, lieutenant-generals and generals, admirals and naval captains, mustered in force, and took their places on the red velvet-covered benches appropriated and ticketed for their accommodation; and a more brilliant or varied mass of colour can scarcely be imagined. Suddenly we are hushed to silence. "Sa Majeste l'Imperatrice!" is shouted by a chamberlain. Preceded by the officers of her household, and by Princess Mathilde and Princess Clothilde, the Empress coiffee a la Marie Antoinette, a thing of blue feathers, and black feathers, a white aigrette, and white tulle, called a bonnet, surmounting her bright auburn hair; her dress of bright blue satin, looped (I should almost say hooped) over the skirt train—advanced between rows of bowing senators and deputies, and passed on to the throne, before which she stood for a moment curtseying to the brilliant assemblage, and then passed on to the tribune on the right. Princess Clothilde has not the art of dress, and, moreover, has not the pleased expression which commands popularity, yet we all know that a more charming and excellent woman does not live. Princess Mathilde, in violet satin and white lace, looked very well for her age and type, which is eminently Italian. Three minutes elapsed, and "Sa Majeste l'Empereur!" was shouted. Preceded by his household, by one or two Murats, by Prince Napoleon, who looks ill but not diminished in size, and by the Prince Imperial, he walked up the aisle, himself appearing in excellent health. He turns to bow to the Empress, who with her Court had risen on the Emperor's entrance, and then to the assembly—"Asseyez-vous, Messieurs!" The Emperor then read his speech in his usual unimpressionable and somewhat monotonous tone.

The Mechanics' Institute of Toronto has decided to erect a new hall capable of holding 2,500 persons. The estimated cost of the land and building is $30,000, some $12,000 of which the Institute hopes to obtain by subscription from the citizens.

King Victor Emmanuel has transmitted to the Genoese authorities a sum of 6,000f. for the benefit of the children born in that city on the 13th, 14th, and 15th inst. His Majesty has expressed a wish that if boys they should be christened Amadeus, and if girls, Mary Victoria.

The Crown Prince of Austria, says a correspondent, does not look like a Hapsburg, but has as mild and open a face as his lovely mother, Elizabeth. Unfortunately, his intellectual qualities are reported to be anything but bright. He takes but little interest in his studies, and is passionately fond of only one thing—music. He plays the violin and the piano. His parents educate him very sensibly. His mother tries her best to make him as good and kindly as she is herself, and the Emperor occasionally, when his son and heir deserves punishment, chastises him with his own august hands. The Crown Prince, unlike most other boys, seems to take no great interest in military parades, but he is a passionate hunter.

In the London Court of Bankruptcy on Wednesday, Mr Edmund H. Yates, the well-known author, applied for an order of discharge from debts amounting to upwards of £7,000. He was in receipt of a yearly salary of £520 as a clerk in the General Post Office, and his literary earnings were considerable. The assignees applied that Mr Yates should set aside a portion of his income towards the liquidation of his debts, and reference was made to the recent treasury minute as rendering that course desirable. It appeared that on certain of his literary productions Mr Yates incurred losses; and on a drama entitled "Tame Cats," which had occupied six months, he realized a profit of £10 only. The court granted the order of discharge, on a proposal being made by the bankrupt, and accepted by the creditors, for the payment of £100 a year, with one-fifth of any increase of salary he might obtain.

HEALTH, COMFORT, AND ECONOMY.

THE Subscribers have much pleasure in introducing to the public of Kingston NORTH'S PATENT DRUM HEATER, by the use of which a saving of fully 25 per cent will be gained. Having thoroughly tested this valuable invention they can confidently recommend it as a great fuel saver. The cost of the Heater is small compared with the great saving it effects. In many places where two stoves were formerly required, sufficient heat can now be obtained from one with the Heater attached. Parties wishing to try them can do so, and if after a fair trial they are not satisfied that the saving claimed is effected, the Heater can be returned without any charge.

New Method of Washing Clothes without Labour!

THE DOMINION
Steam Washing Boiler.

R. J. REID, Inventor & Patentee.

THIS Machine operates upon purely scientific principles. It is self-acting and dispenses entirely with labour and the wear of clothes. The hot suds and steam, by the action of fire, are driven up through the chambers, poured upon the clothes, and forced through the fabric with astonishing rapidity, cleansing it perfectly without rubbing. It has been thoroughly tested, and pronounced unequalled as a clothes washer by those who have used it. All fabrics, from the finest laces to the best blankets, can be washed perfectly and with ease, without the wash-board. For flannels it is invaluable, as the rubbing, rolling, and pressing process must necessarily full them more or less. It is truly a labour and clothes-saving invention. Washing will no longer be a hardship, and washing day a terror and dread to housewives. The invention can be used in any boiler, and the low price of the article, $4, places it within the reach of every family.
