GOD SAVE IRELAND.

"God Save Ireland," said Whelan just before he died. And we say heartily, Amen! But how is she to be saved? By violence? Assassinations? Insurrections? Conspiracies? Or by legislation? By patient industry? By beneficial legislation? By patient industry? Let us ascertain what has been and is the cause of Ireland—the true cause—the cause which God may be asked to bless, is not one which crime can promote. The end will not justify the means. A curse, and not God's blessing will rest on a cause which depends on crime for its furtherance. Therefore has Ireland been cursed so long—therefore has she been struggling. The wrongdoer has been too often the recipient of sympathy. The promoter of conspiracy and assassination has been too often the idol of the masses. That makes the hearts of many quarters of the earth the hearts of many men's hand against him, and God has been raised against all others. And if Ireland is to be saved to-day it is from the suffering of her own children. If she is not prospering and happy, it is that capital and enterprise are in a land where assassins lurk in ambush for their possessor; where obedience to constituted authority are reckoned as a crime, where reason gives way to passion, and where the cry for unreasoning revenge of injuries past, displaces the nobler precepts of true love. This is Ireland's greatest grievance—that is to be found the chief cause of all she suffers. This is the curse which a blessing is needed to remove. Let those who invoke that blessing for a land its children do not well but often too unwisely, take care that their own crimes, or those they have by their evil counsels, have not rendered impossible, but curse inevitable. When she sues for aid, let her sues for labour for their dear sake after a manner which heaven can hear, they may hope to see Ireland prosperous and happy. Not till then. So thought, we think, the man whom Whelan murdered. So thought the wisest and truest friends of Ireland today. And thinking that, and feeling with them, we repeat, "God Save Ireland!" God save her from the crimes and the criminals which disgrace her cause! God save her from the false friends which lead her to the flame which devours her! God save her and the friends which seek her good, from the spirit of her boisterous and evil past, earnest that she may have a peaceful and prosperous future.—Montreal Gazette.

Sumner is one of the most radically Republican men in the American Confederacy, and it perhaps only refuses to assent to the proposition to insert the word "white" from the State Constitution in order to allow the coloured population to vote. There are but few coloured people in the State, yet political equality will not be conceded there. The Grant platform as laid down at Chicago, it will be remembered, set forth the principle that each State should be allowed to decide for itself whether or not the coloured population should be permitted to exercise the franchise privilege, except in the South, where the individual States were to have no voice in the matter.

A PETITION AGAINST THE JESUITS OF FRANCE.

A petition signed by a number of persons, at the head of the list being the name of M. Senepart, an ancient page of the first Napoleon, contains, among other arguments, the following reasons:

"In asking you to compel the Government to expel the Jesuits from France, we only claim the enforcing of the law concerning them which has never been repealed. The shameful scandal which has lately been divulged in Bordeaux, and which has brought upon them a well founded condemnation, proves that they obey no other authority but their own, and that the minister of public education is perfectly disarmed in presence of their might. If such facts had taken place under Napoleon I their colleges and houses would have been closed, before 24 hours had elapsed, by the grand-master of the university.

"The fathers know but one authority, that of their general, who, like the Pope, commands urbi et orbi (the city and the world), and before whom the sovereign who gives them hospitality is a mere unconscious tool. Such a sectarian order cannot be tolerated in its contempt of the laws of France."

The petition is preceded by the three following quotations:

"The Jesuits are the enemies of God."—The Abbe Carol.

"The Jesuits always leave after them a trace of blood and poison."—Napoleon I.

"To Jesuits we owe nothing but expulsion."—Thiers

A New Orleans lawyer, the other day, who was defending a case against a railroad company for running over and maiming a child, told the jury that if they awarded damages, the people of New Orleans would be for ever sending their children into the street to be run over.

Two boys attempted to steal a ride for a few blocks by getting on the cow catcher of a locomotive on the Hudson River Railroad, on Thursday. They made the mistake of choosing an express train, and were carried as far as Peekskill without stopping. They were so terrified by fright that on reaching the depot in the latter place one tumbled to the ground senseless, and the other had to be helped off. They will never play truant again.

Bronislaus Sawaro, one of the most able and popular of the leaders of the Polish national movement of 1861-2, disappeared mysteriously a few months after the insurrection broke out. He has just found means to communicate with his friends, who, after making every effort to find out what had become of him, had given him up for lost. He was sentenced early in 1863 to Siberia; but it now appears that for the last five years he has been chained to a wall in one of those fatal casemates, lying below the level of the river Neva at Cronstadt, where so many political prisoners have died a miserable death. Those who have seen him there, and who knew him at Warsaw, when he was a handsome, spirited young man, say that it is now quite impossible to recognize him. He is a cripple, prematurely old, utterly broken down by disease and suffering, and without a spark of his old energy left.

An almost tragic occurrence has lately taken place at Llyntmawa, a town on the borders of Breconshire, and in a mountainous part of Wales. Two children, sisters, of the respective ages of six and three years, were missed from their home one evening, and despite every possible search and inquiry they could not be found. The search was continued the next day, and at length, a little distance on the mountain, the two little ones were discovered lovingly entwined in each other's arms, as if in the sleep of death, and to all appearance the vital spark had departed. It was, however, discovered that the bodies were still warm, and, medical aid being at once procured, consciousness was soon restored. The little ones appeared to know but little as to how they passed the time since leaving home, excepting that they lost themselves on the mountain, and not being able to find their way back, they sat down and fell asleep in one another's arms, in which position they must have remained for the long period of 24 hours.

We learn from an Eastern State contemporary that, very recently, damages to the tune of $4,850 were awarded to Judge Goddard by a Maine jury, on account of the treatment inflicted upon that gentleman by a brakesman on the Grand Trunk Railway, between Montreal and Portland. It seems that the judge left the car temporarily at a way station, and while doing so was accosted by a man who demanded and received his ticket. Upon re-entering the car again and resuming his seat, the brakesman, who was the same man who had demanded and received the ticket, denied all about it, and when contradicted by the Judge, he grew furious and threatened violent things. All this was represented to the Company, it is said, but instead of dealing as they had a right to do in the matter, the offending brakesman was actually promoted to a better position on the road. Hence the action by the Judge, in which the company was mulcted of nearly $5,000 for the incivility of one of its servants.

Last week a farmer named Bassit, living at Cassville, Wisconsin, went down to Galena, and disposed of a load of pork, at the highest market figures. The product of the sale amounted to one hundred and twenty dollars, which sum he placed in his pockets as any sensible man would, and started for home. He had accomplished half the distance, and was allowing his horse to jog along at an easy pace, when he overtook a surly individual who requested the privilege of riding, a request which the kind-hearted farmer granted with much alacrity, making room on the seat beside him. They rode along for some distance conversing, when suddenly the stranger, without a moment's warning, presented a seven-shooter at the head of the farmer, and demanded all the money the latter had in his possession. Mr Bassit was of course taken aback by this abrupt change in the conversation, but remarking that he supposed he must surrender, drew himself up as if to take his pantaloons pocket. The ready compliance seemed to throw the robber off his guard, an opportunity which Mr Bassit improved by planting a tremendous blow between the fellow's eyes, knocking him out of the sleigh. Before the robber could recover his balance Mr Bassit had lashed his horses into a vigorous run, and was soon a safe distance from the field of action. The baffled highwayman fired after him a volley of five or six shots in quick succession; none taking effect beyond wounding one of the horses slightly in the leg.

If we are not misinformed, Messrs Horsey & Co. have notified the Intercolonial Railway Commissioners that they will not go on with the contract for which they tendered. We believe they made some error in the calculation of the earth work, and did not feel quite satisfied with the precision of the plans in other respects, and the wording of the proposed contract. Misunderstanding might be disastrous, and it is better that there should be reconsideration now than loss and probable ruin later. It is commonly understood that requirements of the engineer, different from the understanding of contractors, when they tendered, led to their ruin in a sister Province. It is possible the same thing might happen here. The Toronto Globe stated the other day that we had hinted there was something wrong in the giving out of these contracts. We said on the contrary that everything had been done in the face of day; and that it would be a matter of satisfaction if the work could be performed for the prices tendered for and accepted. We were, however, surprised at their lowness, after the information, which we had reason to believe intelligent, which had been given to us respecting the probable cost of the work, and we thought it better to utter a few words of caution. We did not want to see anybody ruined, nor any after-claps, nor any after appeals for sympathy through political influences; but that there should be a clear understanding that the work of tendering was a serious one; and the figures stated at all costs to be abided by. The very terms of the tenders, we believe, warned the contractors that such prices were asked to be stated in the first place, at which the work could be honestly done. And we believe this is the best way in which the Dominion can get the best and cheapest railway.—Montreal Gazette.
