A Down Town Merchant,

During passed several sleepless nights, disturbed by the agonies and cries of a suffering child, and becoming convinced that Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup was just the article needed, procured a supply for the child. On reaching home, and representing his wife with what he had done, she refused to have it administered to the child, as she was strongly in favour of homœopathy. That night the child passed in suffering, and the parents without sleep. Returning home the day following, the father found the baby still worse; and while contemplating another sleepless night, his mother stepped from the room to attend to some domestic duties, and left the father with the child. During her absence he administered a portion of the Soothing Syrup to the baby, and said nothing. That night all hands slept well, and the little fellow awoke in the morning bright and happy. The mother was delighted with the sudden and wonderful change, and although at first offended at the deception practised upon her, has continued to use the Syrup, and recommends it. A single trial of the Syrup never yet failed to relieve the baby, and overcome the prejudices of the mother. 25 cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

Be sure and call for

"Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup," having the fac-simile of "Curtis & Perkins" on the outside wrapper. All others are base imitations.

HOW BOUND HORSES.—A horse is said to be bike-bound when his skin will not slip under the pressure of the hand, but sticks as if it was glued, which condition is always dependent on a deranged state of the stomach and digestive organs. By correcting which, and giving them a healthy tone and condition, the disease or complaint will disappear. Experience has proved that the means best adapted to this end is "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy.' It has been used in numerous cases with complete success, invariably effecting a cure in a few days. It is the best condition medicine known, and may be given with perfect safety at all times, and does not require that the horse be kept from work. Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all Medicine Dealers.

Is health worth having? If it is, protect it—it is a jewel as easily lost as virtue, and in many cases as difficult to recover. In this climate, and more particularly at this season of the year, people are very apt to take cold and suffer from sore throat, coughs, spitting of blood, and pulmonary complaints generally, which if not checked immediately lead to serious consequences. The question arises—which is the quickest and most effectual remedy? Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers have been before the public for twenty years, and have always given perfect satisfaction, and invariably effect permanent cures when taken in season. Sold by all medicine dealers and country stores generally throughout the Province at 25 cents a box.

GUNN'S
DERBY CONDITION POWDERS FOR HORSES AND CATTLE.

THIS Preparation, long and favourably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as lung fever, glanders, yellow water, heaves, coughs, distemper, founder, loss of appetite and vital energy. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite, gives a smooth and glossy skin, and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of cows this Preparation is invaluable. It increases the quantity and improves the quality of the milk, gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

view of inducing her to leave was not giving her a change of clothing. When she asked for clean sheets I refused them and referred her to her friends.

The Solicitor-General—Then that was to make her uncomfortable? Defendant—You may draw what inference you like.

The Solicitor-General—Then I shall draw it.

Defendant—The other sister knew I wanted Miss Saurin to leave. I don't know that they seconded my efforts by making her uncomfortable. I don't know that she was refused access to the library. The attic was as comfortable as the bath which room was small, and she could not conveniently walk from one end to the other. She might have walked across part of it. It was inconveniently small for walking. I never heard a second sister dressed herself outside because there was not room enough inside. There was one sister inside and one outside. A sister who had sprained her knee was put with her into the back room. She did not use liniment, but a fomentation of hot water. I perfectly assert Miss Saurin could leave the room whenever she liked. I do not know if she was ill. I made no inquiry about it, and no such communication was made to me. She was only in the upper room about a fortnight. A novice or a postulant about to be rejected lives apart from the community. Dismissal of a professed sister never before occurred in our order. She left without my knowing it for the moment, and as she left I said to a sister I was sorry she was gone before I had given her the kiss of peace. I did not inquire of Sir H. Cooper about her health. I took the ring off whilst she was a professed sister, because I knew she was to leave. The Bishop had sent the absolution to me for Father Saurin. I thought she would not be willing to relinquish the ring when she left. She took the ring off herself. She did not ask me to return it. She did not appear to like it. She did not cry. It never was returned to her. The ring is a symbol of her union with our Lord. I had no power to take it off.

The Solicitor-General—Where did you get that power? Defendant—I considered I had it. It is not in the rules, traditions, or customs. I don't know that it is mentioned anywhere.

The Solicitor-General—Is it not a great indignity? Defendant—I don't know.

The Solicitor-General—And that you really mean to say? Defendant—Yes.

Re-examined—I cannot recall to my mind a circumstance of taking the ring from a professed nun. The bishop has the absolute power of expulsion. I never knew of any other circumstances of expulsion but this. I have read of them. She knew of her brother's death the day the new as came. The notice was put up.

By the Solicitor-General—I destroyed some papers in 1866. I was ill, expecting to die: and others I arranged for the community. In 1867 I made an affidavit with respect to the papers. In November and December, 1866, after the action was brought, I selected such papers as I thought would be useful to Miss Saurin, and the rest I destroyed.

This closed the defendant's evidence. The Court then adjourned till Monday morning.

ELEVENTH DAY.

The hearing of this remarkable case was resumed in the Court of Queen's Bench before the Lord Chief Justice and a Special Jury. The interest was unabated, and hundreds of persons congregated about the courts who were unable to obtain admission. The Solicitor General, Mr Digby Seymour, Q. C., and Mr Wills were counsel for the plaintiff; Mr Hawkins, Q. C., Mr Mellish, Q. C., and Mr Charles Russell were counsel for the defendants.—Mrs. Kennedy's evidence in chief was continued: In June, 1864, Miss Saurin came from Clifford to Hull. I returned about the middle of August, 1864. I had the principal charge of the schools. Miss Saurin was employed in them under me. It seemed to me I could not trust her, because she disobeyed my instructions in my absence and neglected a duty imposed on her. I gave her the charge of a class reading monosyllables, and most of whom already knew their letters; and on examining this class, according to my custom, I found, about six weeks after she had charge of it, that the children, instead of making any progress, had forgotten their letters. I had to take the class from her and give her an infant class to attend to. In the same manner she shortened the time of the children's lessons, instead of adhering to the time table. She used to put on fire, get the stove red hot, and endanger the lives of the children. I frequently spoke to her, but without effect. I observed nothing about the school children, but two or three sisters reported to me that they had good reason for thinking Miss Saurin took them, and I mentioned it to the Superior. Most of the parents of the children are in comfortable circumstances, and were particular in providing them with good dinners. When it was first reported to me I gave another sister the especial charge of the dinners, and I believe I directed Miss Saurin not to touch them. Ultimately Miss Saurin had to be removed to an infant school, out of the convent, where a sister was placed with her. On the 31st of May 1865, Mrs Starr consulted me with reference to the plantiff's conduct. I advised the superior to ask Miss Saurin for her pocket as she came in from the school, in order to see if she brought the children's dinners home to the convent. The superior replied, "Perhaps she will only give me one pocket, and yet have three or four others that she would not give up." After supper, about 25 minutes after four, the mother superior called Miss Saurin into her own room. Mrs. Starr bolted the door to prevent any one from coming in. Miss Saurin could have unbolted it if she liked. I sat down at a table to write, and the mother superior desired her to take off her veil, habit, and so on. I can't say for a fact what she took off, as I merely glanced at her once, but I know Mrs Starr's manner was very gentle—particular so. We went to the spiritual lecture at five. Mrs Starr took the notes out of her pocket, and read them. We understood them perfectly well (laughter).—The Lord Chief Justice: There is very bad spelling in the notes?—Witness: She cannot spell.—The Lord Chief Justice: So I should think. It seems strange that she should have been put to schools at Clifford.—Witness: Meat was not served to her different from that given to the other sisters during the time she was a member of the community. It is untrue that I ran for a dry crust of bread six or seven days old, and brought it—it is untrue. I never remember fetching bread at any time. In 1865, instead of diminishing the meat, when she asked for more, I sent the plate back and had more meat put upon it. She was clothed as well as other sisters, but I know that she destroyed her things. We all wear old clothes. As a practice of poverty we wear our clothes as long as they will keep together. This is the 14th year I have been constantly wearing the habit I have on. It is the practice also to take old clothes from one sister and give them to another. I had charge of her clothing once in the absence of the mother superior, and I gave her an article—a tunic—that I had first examined.—The Lord Chief Justice: What is it? What part of the dress is it?—Witness: Like a lady's nightdress is the best description. It reaches from head to foot, and fastens at the wrists. It was perfectly sound when I gave it to her. There might have been some pin holes, but the following week it was a mass of rags, and on inquiry I was told it had been sent to the laundry in that state. In 1865 plaintiff came to me about an article of dress, and believing she was telling me a falsehood I inquired of a sister, in her presence if, she had repaired Miss Saurin's cloak, and she assured me she had done so particularly well. Miss Saurin denied it again, and became particularly noisy about it.—The Lord Chief Justice: Is that a breach of the rule to become noisy?—Witness: Yes; she shouted out and denied it. That is against the rule, and she asserted what she had said was true, "as sure as the hand was on her body," which was a very unladylike expression. My watch had been taken from me about a year or two before Miss Saurin's was taken.—The Lord Cheif Justice: What is the object of taking the watches?—It is too expensive to have them repaired by the convent, and if the friends do not repair them the superior takes them.—The Lord Chief Justice: I ask the question, because the plaintiff said hers was to be put in the lottery?—Witness: There is no truth in it. We have lotteries with watches, but inferior ones. It is usual to take them for the poor and some of the sisters offer theirs. I have eight or nine now in my possession. It is customary by the rules to keep back letters. I had one kept back which the mother superior burnt without my seeing it. I was assistant superior at the time. I kept back one because one of the sisters was much praised, and I was afraid it would make her vain. I have no recollection of her brother Patrick's letter being taken from her before she could read it. I have very bad memory (laughter). Miss Saurin was not put to more menial work than the other sisters. I often swept the schools at Hull, and I now keep my two rooms clean. Hard labour is one of our characteristic duties. After she was to leave the community the sisters stayed with her by turns, and I asked to take my share of the duties. There was no restraint put upon her. She walked about the corridor as much as she pleased. One day she was walking about the corridor saying her prayers, which I thought she could as well say in her room. I told her she was transgressing the rules, rules and that as a secular she ought to desist. I can't say what she said or did after. After the visit of her brother she appeared to try all means to make herself ill. She abstained from food. She could not possibly support herself with what she took. Proper food, the same as the rest of the community had, was provided for her. She would sit up in bed without clothes, except her tunic, and then she would get out and put her feet into a basin of cold water, and so on. Miss Saurin had access to the library, where there was a fire.—Cross-examined by the Solicitor General: Miss Saurin might have been late to her duties five or six times during three or four months when I stood in the hall and hurried her. She several times during three months dismissed the school children before their time. I cannot say how many. On inquiry I found that she had employed the pupil teachers to put the clock on. I think I heard it from Bridget Conolly, one of the pupil teachers. I will not undertake to say I heard it from more. My memory does not serve me beyond her. I am not sure that I mentioned it to Miss Saurin. As a rule, Miss Saurin laid it on the clock. Her breaches of silence referred to all the time she was under me, such as refectorian, &c. Talking from necessity, and in a low voice, in the discharge of those duties, would not be a breach of silence, but speaking too loud and too far off would be. The other cases were that she talked all about the convent without the least necessity. She almost resided in the pantry (laughter).—The Solicitor-General: That was when she was refectorian?—Witness: Yes (laughter). I cannot say how many times I saw Miss Saurin running away from school as I was entering.—The Solicitor-General: How many more?—Witness: I cannot say.—The Solicitor-General: I should like to know; the case is one of life to myclient.—The Lord Chief Justice: I must really object to such remarks. You have done it two or three times. Those are observations for the Jury.—Witness: I am cautious in my answers, from the manner in which the Solicitor-General cross-examined the mother superior.—The Lord Chief Justice (to witness): I never heard a witness give better evidence. Don't detract from it now.—Witness: I cannot possibly say how often. In 1859 I determined to turn my eyes from her faults as much as I could.—The Solicitor-General: Now about the mutton. You used to generally have mutton, as at Eton.—The Lord Chief Justice: I don't know what used to be done at Eton.—The Solicitor-General: We liked it (laughter).—Mr Mellish: We had to do as many others did, go up in the town and get better (laughter).—The Solicitor General: Mr Mellish! Mr Mellish! we never did it (loud laughter).—The Lord Chief Justice: If you did you committed a fault, and I presume you did penance (laughter).—Witness: Every one of us had to do penance. I have had to kiss the floor constantly. It is a grievous offence to write letters without permission. In June and July, during the absence of the mother superior, Miss Saurin ate the mutton as well as the others. Our intention all along has been to exchange the watches for some sacred plate for the altar. It is perfectly understood by the sisters that the watches I have are to be disposed of for that purpose. Lotteries are being held for raising money for the relief of the poor, or some other pious purpose. I think when plaintiff's watch was taken there was no probability of a lottery. I consider I have a bad memory. I prepared my statement
