WHAT A WOMAN CAN DO.

The New York correspondence of the Pro[illegible] gives the following story of [illegible] energetic woman:

She was born a lady, as the world [illegible]. She had a loving father, who spared [illegible] pains to give her the brilliant accom[illegible] of her station. She had a troop [illegible] admirers—gay butterflies around her beau[illegible] and wealth. One she married, and rich [illegible] imposing was the wedding. But the married life turned out unhappily. The husband, after spending the fortune of his [illegible], ran away at last and left [illegible] in debt, ran away at last and left [illegible] young mother of his child alone, with [illegible] debts and disgrace, and her own sad [illegible] to work for her living as best [illegible] alone, to work for her living as best [illegible] could, or starve if work she could not. The deserted woman pined away at first, [illegible] shed bitter tears and became faded [illegible] broken. One day she awoke to the [illegible] fact that she must work or starve. [illegible] could not go back to her father, and [illegible] pride kept her from former friends. But did she do? In vain she told over [illegible] list of talents. Every chance seemed [illegible] to her. By sewing she could not [illegible] enough to live and pay the rent. Her [illegible] she had neglected after marriage. The doting father had given her ornament [illegible] but both in her education—nothing to which she could put her hands for support. At the same time a man said to her, "Come down [illegible] in my farm this season, and work in the [illegible] strawberry field." Nothing but dire neces[illegible] made her go. The man was kind to [illegible] and made the work light. All the [illegible] she worked for him, and in the open [illegible] and with the plain, regular living, her [illegible] came back to her. She became [illegible] and hopeful, as in former days. [illegible] was her chance. When the season was [illegible] she said to her employer, 'Take me [illegible] your business! I have shown what I [illegible] do. My past life I shall drop. I will become a business woman!' He thought she was jesting at first; but she was in [illegible]. Her offer was accepted. For [illegible] years this woman acted as clerk and manager for one of the large produce [illegible] came into her hands. No better sales[illegible] than she, and no better executive. At [illegible] she bought an interest, afterwards half [illegible] the business. It seemed as if her old [illegible] had been led by somebody else; [illegible] being a nervous, timid woman, she [illegible] in a sound, brisk, laborious worker. [illegible] made a good home in Jersey for her [illegible] and aged father. And to-day there [illegible] no more popular dealer in the market, [illegible] no more capable woman in New York, [illegible] no finer appearing lady anywhere [illegible] this selfmade woman, who can daily [illegible] seen managing her extensive business in [illegible] Washington Market, associating with mar[illegible] men, but never forgetting, nor do they, [illegible] she is a lady, and commanding all the respect due to her sex."

THE NEW ART OF SOLID COLOURING.

About 30 months ago an inventor while making means of making barrel staves impervious to petroleum, accidentally used a piece of marble, in the vat containing the colors with which he was trying to fill the pores of the wood. On taking out the marble he noticed that it was beautifully stained. About a month later he picked it up, examined it, tried to wash it, broke it with a hammer, and lo!—the colour had penetrated the whole mass! Perceiving the value of the discovery he began new investigations. A series of about 25,000 experiments was instituted, and now, after two years patient toil, this discovery is set forth to the world.

Yesterday a number of gentlemen were invited to call at the laboratory. Here they found an Italian sunset in enduring stone. Here were snow-white marbles from Carrara, turned into scarlet splendour not found in nature save in the gem, the flower, and the cloud. On one hand the purple of the Cæsars gleamed, and on the other a Danaë's yellow lustre rivalled the marble from Siena's quarries. Here a plan white chimney piece had been tinted with dove-colored hues, and there the new art had created a massive black-veined emerald, eclipsing the finest verd-antique. More than 400 hues, tints and shades, blazed on every side with a colour that it had not been entered into the heart of man to conceive as possible in the domain of architecture. This invention consists in the discovery of a mordant, with which the proper colors are mixed. In a bath of this the marble is placed, molecular action ensues, and in a few hours or days the whole mass is saturated with colour. The severest tests from acids and exposure show that these colours are more durable than those of nature. The interstices of the marble being filled, grease cannot penetrate, and severest weather can scarcely wear it, and it becomes susceptible of the highest polish. In this inexpensive process secures the three great ends of beauty, durability, and economy. For a white marble altar in a new cathedral at Albany $65,000 in gold have been appropriated. This Company have offered to put up one of purple for $18,000 in greenbacks.

Not only can marble, granite, and all similar materials be solidly coloured, but so can wood, the result being a cheap and exquisitely beautiful material, which requires neither painting nor varnishing. The vista of architectural magnificence opened to the view by this discovery must be left to the reader's imagination.

The Bishop of Carlisle has been forced by ill-health to give up his episcopal duties for a season.

A negro boy broke his neck, week before last, while playing "circus actor," near Eutaw Greene county, Ala.

Negotiations are carried on between the Courts of Saint James and Saint Petersburg, with a view to an understanding upon the settlement on their respective frontiers in Central Asia.

The Liverpool Mercury says that the total number of valentines delivered this year in the postal districts of Liverpool was 115,000. As in former years, an immense number of "shams" and dolls were sent as valentines. About 300 objectionable articles, such as bullocks' hearts, black puddings, and rats, were also sent, but these were, by order of the Post-Office authorities, stopped and destroyed. One gentleman was favoured with a nightcap, which was superscribed, "To ——, a sleepy-headed gentleman," &c.

A DUTCHMAN OPPOSED TO INSURANCE.

A certain Dutchman, the owner of a house, had effected an insurance on it for eight hundred dollars, although it had been built for a great deal less. The house burned down, and this Dutchman claimed the full amount for which it had been insured. But the officers of the company refused to pay any more than its actual value—about six hundred dollars. He expressed his dissatisfaction in powerful broken English, interlarding his remarks with some choice Teutonic oaths.

"If you wish it," said the cashier of the company, "we will build you a house larger and better than the one burned, as we are quite positive that it can be done for even less than six hundred dollars." To this proposition the Dutchman objected, and was at last compelled to take the six hundred dollars.

Some weeks after he had received the money, he was called upon by the same agent, who wanted him to take a policy of life insurance on himself or on his wife.

"If you insure your wife's life for $2,000" the agent said, "and she should die, you would have the sum to solace your heart."

"Dat be tam!" exclaimed the Dutchman, "You 'surance fellers ish all tiefs! If I insure my vife, and my vife she dies, and I goes to de office to git my two thousand, do I git all de money? No, not quite. You say to me: 'She van't vorth two thousand dollars, she vas vorth about six hundred dollars. If you don't like to take six hundred dollars, ve vill git you a pigger wife.'"

THE EFFECT OF EXTRAVAGANCE IN DRESS.

In a book devoted to a vindication of the infamous Lucrezia Borgia, the author presents us with a picture of the rage for showy and expensive costume in Ferrara all through that fifteenth century which that Duchess illustrated towards its close. About the middle of it, Leonello, then Marquis of Ferrara, found the scandal of extravagant dress among women to have waxed to such a pitch that he summoned a private meeting of the chief men of the city, who were for the most part husbands and fathers. Interrogating them as to whether there was one among them who did not think the costly nuisance ought to be abated, the Marquis received an unanimous reply in harmony with his own sentiments. Accordingly, war was at once declared by the authorities against women's long trains and flapping sleeves. No matron was to spend more than a third of her dowry on attire and jewels, and for modistes, tailors, or goldsmiths to extend credit or render assistance to them in evading the law was made penal. The same edict prohibited them from wearing a train or tail which, when they stood upright, could be stretched out for more than half a yard from their heels. Lest they should have the courage to do that within doors which, in consequence of the decree, they would not dare do henceforward in the public streets, where detection was certain, a box was to be placed by the entrance door of the Cathedral, next to the holy water stoup, into which through a small slit denunciations against any offenders might be dropped, without the names of the informers being known. It was thus hoped that even husbands, fathers, and brothers would become tale-bearers against their ruinous female relatives. But we gather that it was all to no purpose. The box was made and duly stuck up, and the carpenter's bill for it may still be inspected in the Cathedral account-books. The box had three keys, one of which was to be kept by the syndic, one by the podesta, and one by the twelve "wise men," any of whom might open and examine the contents of the box and prosecute the accused. Yet for all that, we find a Farrarese chronicler complaining in 1484 that matters are "changed for the worse." Female tails were longer than ever. As in Ferrara in the fourteenth century, so in London in the nineteenth. Yes, and why not? will be asked by the retorting sophist. Why not? Listen! "And what," goes on to say the same Farrarese chronicler, "is the effect of all this extravagance? Is it not lamentable? See, in consequence, how few girls get husbands. Nor is it much to be wondered at that young men should object to choose those for their wives who in appearance and manners are so very little different from the class to whom they pretend to hold themselves superior." There it is. The same cause at work; the same consequence. "How few girls get husbands!" Is that of no importance? Or is it of any less importance because the same social trouble and scandal bewildered a Christian community four hundred and fifty years ago, which are troubling us now? Are we to be content with reflecting that we are no worse in England in 1869 than they were in Italy in 1584? Are we any better? That in the question. We have railways, telegraphs, newspapers, sewing-machines, breech-loaders, and velvet trowsers. But despite all these fine things, "How few girls get husbands!" And why? Because now, as then, an extravagant style and standard of living are in themselves an impediment to marriage, and because now, as then, sensible men will shrink from tying themselves for life to girls whose passion for ostentation and callousness to female reserve and delicacy in the pursuit of fashion must be some index to their minds. We are quite ready to grant that men are often vicious, selfish, and self-indulgent. But in the matter of wives they prefer contrast to themselves; and, if they find it, nine times out of ten they are cured by it.

The Russian government has addressed to its agents abroad a circular complaining of the part Turkey has played in the last quarrel with Greece. The Turkish government has made a reply to that document, enumerating the measures favourable to the Christians recently adopted by the Ottoman Empire, and stating that these measures would have been more efficient had it not been for the intrigues of certain powers hostile to Turkey and coveting her territory and her wealth.

A remarkable criminal trial has just been concluded in France. A lad of 19 named Jeanson, in training for a priest at the Jesuits' School of Point-a-Moussin, near Nancy, was charged with setting fire to the establishment and cutting the throat of a fellow student named Jonatte, aged 17. He confessed both crimes, but said that he killed Jonnatte because he loved him dearly and could not bear to be separated from him. The charge of arson he met by stating that he had been ill-used by the masters, and burned their books in order to be revenged. The defence set up was insanity; but it did not avail, and the prisoner was sentenced to twenty years' hard labour.

Having passed several sleepless nights, disturbed by the agonies and cries of a suffering child, and becoming convinced that Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup was just the article needed, procured a supply for the child. On reaching home, and acquainting his wife with what he had done, she refused to have it administered to the child, as she was strongly in favour of homœopathy. That night the child passed in suffering, and the parents without sleep. Returning home the day following, the father found the baby still worse and while contemplating another sleepless night, the mother stepped from the room to attend to some domestic duties, and left the father with the child. During her absence he administered a portion of the Soothing Syrup to the baby, and said nothing. That night all hands slept well, and the little fellow awoke in the morning bright and happy. The mother was delighted with the sudden and wonderful change, and although at first offended at the deception practised upon her, has continued to use the Syrup, and suffering, crying babies, and restless nights have disappeared. A single trial of the Syrup never yet failed to relieve the baby, and overcome the prejudices of the mother. 25 cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

HIDE BOUND HORSES.—A horse is said to be hide-bound when his skin will not slip under the pressure of the hand, but sticks as if it was glued, which condition is always dependent on a deranged state of the stomach and digestive organs—by correcting which, and giving them a healthy tone and condition, the disease or complaint will disappear. Experience has proved that the means best adapted to this end is "Darley's Condition Powders and Arabian Heave Remedy." It has been used in numerous cases with complete success, generally effecting a cure in a few days. It is the best condition medicine known, and may be given with perfect safety at all times and does not require that the horse be kept from work. Remember the name, and see that the signature of Hurd & Co. is on each package. Northrop & Lyman, Newcastle, Ont., proprietors for Canada. Sold by all Medicine Dealers.

Is health worth having? If it is, protect it—it is a jewel as easily lost as virtue, and in many cases as difficult to recover. In this climate, and more particularly at this season of the year, people are very apt to take cold and suffer from sore throat, coughs, spitting of blood, and pulmonary complaints generally, which if not checked immediately lead to serious consequences. The question arises—which is the quickest and most effectual remedy? Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers have been before the public for twenty years, and have always given perfect satisfaction, and invariably effect permanent cures when taken in season. Sold by all medicine dealers and country stores generally throughout the Province at 25 cents a box.

EFFECT OF ADVERTISING.—It is amusing at times to observe the stores of the merchants who don't advertise; to see the anxious proprietors looking into the streets and see the people go by, wondering why they don't come in, while the stores of their neighbours who do advertise are thronged with customers. Some people will learn by observation, others will not.—Daily Palladium.

THIS Preparation, long and favourably known, will thoroughly re-invigorate broken down and low-spirited horses, by strengthening and cleansing the stomach and intestines.

It is a sure preventive of all diseases incident to this animal, such as long fever, glanders, yellow water, heaves, coughs, distemper, founder, loss of appetite and vital energy. Its use improves the wind, increases the appetite, gives a smooth and glossy skin, and transforms the miserable skeleton into a fine looking and spirited horse.

To keepers of cows this Preparation is invaluable. It increases the quantity and improves the quality of the milk, gives them an appetite, loosens their hide, and makes them thrive much faster.

TO A YOUNG MERCHANT—When you pay more for the rent of your business house than for advertising your business, you are pursuing a false policy. If you can do business, let it be known."—FRANKLIN.

ART OF ADVERTISING.—Horace Greeley, of New York, says:—The most successful business men in this city are those who have advertised liberally and constantly. A small advertisement constantly appearing is better than a display column occasionally.

NEW STYLES OF TYPE HAVE been added to the DAILY NEWS JOB PRINTING OFFICE. Our two Steam Presses and Automatic Platen Printing Machinery enable us to turn out work in good style, with quick despatch, and at cheap inquiry is solicited.
