THE MISERIES OF A MEMBER OF CONGRESS.

BY DONN PIATT.

I was at work in my room yesterday when a tall specimen of upright humanity stalked in.

"Are you D. P.?" it asked.

Since entering upon my vocation of correspondent—I mean a truthful, independent correspondent—I regard that question with suspicion. I quietly reached out, and in a careless, graceful manner put my right hand on a paper weight of a few pounds, made of "black diamond homogeneous cast-steel, bent cold," for the use of the learned Committee on Commerce, and regarded my visitor closely.

He was a man of about fifty-six, with a bald head, curious, sharp little eyes, an undecided nose, and chin that retreated into a paper collar. His clothes were of what we call store goods in the Far West, and had evidently exhausted the genius of a village tailor. His legs were slender and shaky, not from age, but from a habit of never straightening them at the knee. I said to myself, this is not a fightist. He shuffles through life. He has shuffled into office. So I released my hold on the paper weight, and boldly responded:

"That is my name, sir."

"I am Mr ——, member of Congress from ——. I have read your letters. Mr ——, the editor of your paper, told me to look you up."

"I am glad to know you, sir. Take a seat. What can I do for you?"

"I want some passes," he said earnestly, seating himself.

"What sort of passes?"

"Railroad."

"I fear I cannot help you in that way, Mr ——. I had a pass for myself and family from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, but because in return for the compliment, I said the president had a locomotive in his belly, I am cut off. But why do you want passes? Are you preparing to run away?"

"I wish I could," he answered sadly. "I wish I could. No, that is not it. I am run down by office-seekers from my district. They pile in on me at my boarding house. I have been sleeping every night on my bedroom floor. They follow me about, and chase me down. They have smoked all my cigars and drank up all my whiskey, and now they are getting out of money and want to borrow. I heard where to find you; I made an excuse to go into an alley, and I ran away. A police officer thought I was a thief, and ran after me. I told him I was a member of Congress, running from the office-seekers. He said that was rough, and let me go. There is one—a woman—worse than all the rest. She wants the best post-office I have. What in the infernal junks does Grant mean by setting such an example? All the females in my district are writing to me, and two hundred will be here, somehow, if we don't repeal this foolish law and fill the offices. This woman torments my life out; and yet, if I give her the office, I won't dare go home. She follows me up like Satan. I can't sleep, I can't put on a clean shirt, she pops on me so unexpected. Now, if I had a railroad pass."

"How would that help you?"

"I believe, if I could say to her, 'I can't give you an office, but here is a railroad pass, she'd take it and go. But Lord love you, I want a hundred. They're getting out of money, I tell you, and it I only had 'em? Now, can you help me? You news paper men always have lots of passes. The editor in our town hasn't paid railroad fare for more'n twenty years."

I had to assure my poor friend that I really could not help him. I suggested to him to get a sign painted, "Small-pox in this House," and put it up over his door.

"Pooh," he cried, "do you suppose they'd care for that? Every bloody one of 'em would get vaccinated, and work in on me. Cholera would not keep 'em off. I wish I'd been sunk in eternal thunder before I consented to come to Congress. Consented? I worked like a mule for it. It cost me all of $800—more fool I. What can I do? My neighbours and constituents wanted a national dog law, for the better protection of sheep, and to raise the price of wool. Why, it would take a fellow two years to learn the rules, and then I don't think I could do a hooter. But cuss these office-seekers."

"You are safe on the floor, however."

"Devil a bit. They get around the doors and send in their names. They run up the gallery, to see if I'm there, and then down they come. I hid in the barber shops every day for a week, before they found me out. And then Littlebang, who wants to be minister to Europe, wrote home to the paper and said I had been made chairman of the standing committee on hair."

How long my friend would have continued his lamentations I cannot say, but he was interrupted by an arrival of sixteen of his friends, and left very dejected.

Dion won the deciding game at billiards with Foster in Montreal last night.

A vast bed of rock salt has been discovered at Dax, in France, which is reported to extend over more than a mile in diameter, and is 100 feet thick. It lies at a small depth, and is of great purity.

THE QUEEN AND HER HUSBAND.—The Queen's affection for her mother was most tender and devoted, and seemed to be only deepened by her own maternity. I have been told by a friend who had her information from a lady of the court, that so utterly overwhelmed was the Queen by the death of this good mother, that there were serious fears for her reason. Her grief was not violent, but she seemed stunned and bewildered; could not sleep or weep, and for days refused food. It was her noble and patient husband who at last aroused her from this sad, listless state, and persuaded her to eat, to take up again the burden of her mortal and royal life. The same friend told me that when Prince Albert died, the Queen, who still loved him with all the passionate worship of her girlhood, and with something still deeper and better—as the father of her children—bore up with wonderful fortitude to the end; received in solemn quietness his last word, and kiss, and look, and then, when all was over, rose, and with that beautiful consideration for others, which is the highest mark of English high breeding, said to the physicians of the Prince standing near, in sorrowful dejection, "Gentlemen, I know that all that human knowledge and skill could do to save my dear husband has been done, and I thank you for your faithful devotion." Then she bowed "right queenly," and walked calmly from the chamber of death to her own room there to wrestle with her great anguish alone, to face the dreary blank of her widowed and desolate life. Among the many millions of her subjects, there was not at this hour, perhaps, a heart heavier with sorrow, more lost and desolate, than hers. Yet in her early years, before grief had invaded her royal state, and death had come to court, like some horrible masker, she was a merry monarch. She loved dancing, plays, jests, games and practical jokes, with now and then a hearty romp. She was especially fond of blindman's buff—and often, after some tiresome ceremony, formal reception, or congratulation, she would propose to her ladies to lock the doors, to keep out the wise people and fools, and have a good frolic at that old-fashioned English game.—Grace Greenwood.

SOLD AGAIN!

AND GOT THE MONEY.

HARDLY a barrel or bag of FLOUR will be left in my store on Saturday night. Everything going off like hot cakes. Thought I had FLOUR enough for a month; thought I had HAMS enough for two months. Agreeably mistaken, MORRISON! No inferior goods kept at MORRISON'S. That accounts for it. Straightforward dealing at MORRISON'S. That also accounts for it.

Expected in a few days, four car-loads of the different grades of FLOUR at MORRISON'S.

165 SUGAR CURED HAMS shipping to-day for MORRISON.

If you want to live well, feel well, sleep well, and be at peace with all the world and yourself, use MORRISON'S FLOUR and MORRISON'S SUGAR CURED HAMS.

EFFECT OF ADVERTISING.—It is amusing at times to observe the stores of the merchants who don't advertise; to see the anxious proprietors looking into the streets and see the people go by, wondering why they don't come in, while the stores of their neighbours who do advertise are thronged with customers. Some people will learn by observation, others will not.—Daily Palladium.

ART OF ADVERTISING.—Horace Greeley, of New York, says:—The most successful business men in this city are those who have advertised liberally and constantly. A small advertisement constantly appearing is better than a display column occasionally.

WANTED A FARM.

A RICH and strong sandy loam, with, if possible, an orchard on it, in the neighbourhood of Kingston, Toronto, Hamilton, or of some quickly growing town, and on the lake shore of Ontario or Erie, would be preferred. Though a very small farm is all that is absolutely needed, yet, if otherwise desirable, a larger one might be purchased.

Apply to J. A. ALLEN, Kingston, Ont.
