Focusing on educational partnerships

By 2050, it is estimated that the planet will have a population of close to 10 billion people, almost 40 megacities and triple the amount of current global trade.

This view of the world as seen through the eyes of Siemens Canada will require the people resources to establish the electrification, automation and digitalization to make it all happen, according to Dr. Tom Murad, head of the Siemens Canada Engineering and Technology Academy.

Murad was the keynote speaker at the Halton Industry Education Council's (HIEC) annual Fall Breakfast with the Mayors November 17 at the Halton campus of McMaster University's DeGroote School of Business.

The event brings together business, education and community partners "to enhance career education."
