A Paris correspondent of the Times that it mentioned a day or two ago of a clandestine journal called Propagateur, containing articles of ex ion violence, have been sent under cover several persons. It is curious that the post office clerks, who gave some time proofs of extraordinary acuteness in ing dangerous enclosures by only the envelope, could allow the to reach its destination without hindrance, or even delay. Now, it be borne in mind that a new law on press is soon to come before the Cham ; that it is of considerable importance for the Government and public at ; and that it has already occasioned vision among the most devoted friends the Government. One is reminded of alarming productions, the Spectre Rouge, instance, and others of a similar alarm- tendency, that appeared before the y d'Etat—no doubt to prepare the pub- mind for that event. It is not, then, unbearitable to suppose that these are mply artifices on the part of those who pose all liberal modifications in the laws the press, and the majority counts many them."

Walter Brown, the well-known oarsmen, has arrived at Portland with his paper boat. It is 31½ feet long, 12 inches wide, and weighs 22 pounds. All that portion of the boat, save where the sculler sits, is gas tight, so that in the event of a race sufficient gas may be taken into it to reduce its weight to eight pounds.

A Paris correspondent of the London News writes as follows "Rosa Bonheur has been named Académicienne by the Antwerp Institute. Honours richly deserved are rapidly crowning the great artiste's career. In 1865, the Empress drove from the Palace of Fontainebleau to present her, in person, with the star of the Legion d'Honneur. Mlle. Bonheur's country place is rather an extensive farm than the ordinary residence of a lady of her position. Every variety of cow, sheep, ox, goat, and horse, are to be seen, not only on the surrounding lawn, but crowding around their proprietor, who is attired in a cloth blouse in Winter and ruder garments apparently borrowed from her brother, a stick in hand, and hat stuck on a small, but remarkably well shaped head, coiffe à la Titus, or in less technical terms, the hair cut like a man's. The animals know her, and follow her about. She absolutely refuses to receive ordinary visitors."

The private Black Book, a diary kept by one of Maximilian's private secretaries, has been published in Mexico, and reveals some curious personal traits of the chief actors in the Imperial tragedy in that country. The notorious General Juan N. Almonte, one of the chief promoters of the intention, is described as "dishonest, avaricious, and revengeful." The savagery of Marquez is also properly booked, with the remark, "Sent to Jerusalem." Of Miramon, it is told that having once lost at play the money of a company of which he was the captain and treasurer, he drew his sword, and swept all the stakes back again into his pocket. Then follows a recount of of the way in which he upset his fellow-rascal Zuloaga, took posession of the Government, took the field, levied contributions for the army, and spent the money at the gaming table. O'Horan is set down in black. He was, according to all accounts, a cold and vulgar villain. He sometimes decreed death between cigar puffs. "General, I am going to shoot you," he remarked to an astonished prisoner, after taking a last swallow of chocolate with him. The General was Marcial Lascano, and he was shot an hours afterward at Tacubaye.
