AVERAGE OF MONEY.

We know how money can be made, we know how it can be made to go pretty equally distributed among the lowest classes, and how it is to be saved; but very few trouble themselves as to the precise way by which mere metallic pieces of gold, silver, or copper, whether gold, silver, or copper, are coined at the Mint. This is done at the Mint. There are several Mints existing in the Mother Country, at London, at Birmingham, and at York. That at York was at last removed, and continued in operation for a long time, though, once so famous for the coining of money, is now in the neighbourhood, only notorious for the crimes which persons committed there. All the coins known in and concentrated in the Tower, and were carried on till about 1810, or as it is called the Mint, was built. Few persons have the highest stone exterior would be inclined to credit that nearly a quarter of a million was spent on its erection, which will be the fact. At all events, since 1806 has been the only mint for the British Empire.

A popular notion that any one can take gold, or copper to the Mint and have it coined made into an equal number of shillings, or pence, and that this was the fact. But it is true, with respect to gold. Plate other plate and bars of precious metals, and gold trinkets are brought for coinage. Now, however, the Mint is not bound to return coin within less than twenty days, and it is not bound to take private consignments of gold or copper at all. People have advantageous to dispose of it through the ordinary metal dealers, who pay on the spot, and sell the bullion agents who are according as silver or copper. The act of the Mint still allows to take gold from any who choose to do so, though, as a rule, it does not. Gold is done through the bullion dealers, which, of course, has to be melted down, and bars, or foreign coin which either needs it to the Mint or sells it to the Mint. As a fact, however, people who sell gold to the Mint can have it back in shillings, and the country bears the whole expense of the coinage. In a late parliamentary publication which was laid before the House from Mr Peabody, it appears that £10,000 of old gold of all kinds was made into sovereigns. This is only a specimen of the kind that has been in past. It is a similar case, for the first time in the history of the Mint, a single sovereign was coined during the whole of last year, and not a bullion stroke there during the last fifteen months, in which nothing has been added to the coin of the kingdom. It was in the year of 1866 that the Mint gave no more money; but it has not been the case. The Mint is suffering from the depression of the times, and has overtaken all trades in a measure. The demand there is for pennies, not for shillings and crowns, and even at the manufacture of pennies are only taking half-time, and little more than half-wages.

Attempting to describe how the coins are made at the Mint, it may not be out of place to say a few words as to how they are cut out, and how certain coins are more or unpopular for years. The sixpenny and half-crown were always popular; the sixpenny piece, the first, and the half-crown were always unpopular. The crown was first coined in Charles II.'s time, and derived its name from be Guinea, which used sometimes to be coined, and considered as symbolical of the Mint. The guinea was a popular coin, the sovereign as for some time looked upon with distrust. The Mint is very fastidious in their coins in the shape of dies, and there are some which are received with such dislike that the public will not take them till they see they can be of no use to others. In this way the coinage of the Mint was stopped, and the sovereign was thrown upon the public, who have now taken it very kindly indeed. But this is not the case with either the five-shilling or fourpenny pieces. The former were imitations of long standing unpopularity. They were driven out of circulation by the bankers who went to the Mint for them, and the sovereigns whenever to bank-notes, took of which so constantly passed that they remained on the hands of the Mint. The most Eyes worth of the coins are made every year is a Falkland Islands. There the whalers, English Germans, Swedes, and Americans, assemble to the winter in harbour, and among the only accepted currency is the five-shilling piece. The noble is far the handsomest in our coinage, and no longer issued in this country will soon become as much a thing of the past as guineas. This fourpenny piece, which was introduced for the first time, has always been so unpopular that it has been discontinued, and in the last 15 years not one has been coined. The half-crown, too, has fallen in popularity, though not without a great attention on the part of the employers, who took a great deal of trouble to make it popular. But it was unlike the other silver pieces and two-and-sixpenny pieces, and, at the same time, so the latter discontinued, and now only sixpences, and three-penny pieces are coined. What are called the Irish shillings, the shamrock shillings have disappeared from circulation. The amount of damage sustained by the Mint is very small. There are very few crowns or "smashers" in circulation, and as they have to manufacture them, it is to say, to cast each piece in plaster moulds and afterwards stamp it—the process is very expensive. They never make money to order. They make it and sell it to those willing to undertake the coining, or pulling it off on the market at a price of three counterfeit florins in proportion to the risk incurred by the coiner. That counterfeit florins are the best class cost as much as 12s a dozen, and the best class of shillings 6s a dozen, and these coins, unless minutely examined, would be taken off hand by any one; on the other hand, shillings can be got as low as 2s a dozen, and common florins for 3s a dozen. The "smashers', are a peculiar set of rogues, the number of whom has not much increased or diminished for the last 50 years. There is a kind of "cutler's law" among them never to tell from whom they buy the coin, though the Mint police would rather catch one maker of counterfeit coin than twenty utterers. A formidable attempt against the gold coin was made some three or four years ago. A party of Germans established themselves secretly at Hamburg, and entered into a plan for making English sovereigns. These conspirators simply put so much additional alloy into the pure gold as to make its value 17s, instead of 20s. They made proper steel dies, erected presses, and had all the appurtenances for the processes which are gone through in the English Mint. Many thousands of their sovereigns got into circulation on the Continent; for, in fact, none but the Mint authorities could detect them except by weight. By this test, however, they were at last discovered, the coiners traced, and their place of business seized. The chief conspirators escaped, but all their dies, machines, and a very considerable sum in pure and unadulterated gold fell into the hands of the Hamburg authorities, so that the speculation, though boldly conceived and skilfully carried out, was a ruinous one after all.

Those who have now and then to pay in sovereigns at the Bank of England know how often one or two or more light sovereigns are rejected—that is to say, not returned, but cut into two or three pieces, 4d, 6d, or 8d, according to the deficiency of the piece, being charged for the unpleasant process. The popular impression is that these cut sovereigns go back to the Mint to be re melted and re-coined. But there are a vast number of trades in England which require standard gold for all sorts of purposes, and these regularly go to the Bank to buy these cut sovereigns. The reason is obvious; few trades use so much gold at once as to require an ingot of gold, which weighs from 350 to 300 ounces, and if they did they have seldom the means necessary to melt it. But they buy the cut sovereigns by the ounce or the pound, and though as coins they may have been light, yet as metal they are known to be pure. In this manner, between the gilding and porcelain trades, an immense amount of gold is annually absorbed. The porcelain trade alone takes nearly £50,000 worth of gold a year, and between gilding and porcelain the annual consumption of England and France is estimated at not less than 40,000 ounces, which is lost to currency for ever.

PECULIARITIES OF CHINESE RELIGIOUS BELIEF.

We find in Shanghae News Letter some extracts from a pamphlet written by Rev. M. T. Yates, concerning Chinese religious beliefs, the knowledge of which was gained during a long course of missionary labour in that country. Some of the facts stated are very curious:

It would appear that the Taouists, Buddhists, and Confucian philosophers and priests bring their religion of the present day down to the focus of ancestral worship, or tributes due to the dead. "They believe in the existence of two worlds one the world of light (China) and the other the world of darkness, in which men live after death." "They all believe that there is two worlds; for they cannot conceive of any higher degree of pre-science on the part of the authorities of that world than what they see illustrated before their eyes by the acts of the authorities in this.

According to the Chinese, "a man has two souls; one in the chest, and one in the lower extremities." "When a man is dead he is in position to avenge himself of all the injuries of which he may have thought himself the subject." Hence the large contributions of "din" (celestial money), by all who feel that the dead man has aught against them. "The priests, the interpreters and agents of the gods, like the mandarins of this world, are ever on the alert for an opportunity to squeeze the rich." Yet they only propose to extricate the unfortunate Chinese in purgatory from present suffering, therefore, to smooth the road in the dark, the constant cry is give! give! give! until one's wordly riches are wasted in the futile task.

A man who has had his head cut off is past all praying or spending money for, unless his friends can secure the head again and stitch it to the body in this world, so that he can make a respectable show in the next. "They suppose that the dead, who have no one to sacrifice to them, are wandering about in a forlorn condition, like beggars, seeking for the means of support and comfort.

It is estimated that $120,000,000 are expended annually in ancestral worship. "The living are the slaves to the dead." "There is not a tithe of the money expended, or thought bestowed on Buddhism and Confucianism combined, that there is on ancestral worship. If the Taouist system is not a offspring of it, it is only an adjunct to the worship of the dead."

With reference to the Fung-Shuy (wind and water), the position of the Chinese dwellings, public buildings and graves are particularly selected to avoid a North frontage and favour a Southern one. From the North comes death! evil! From the South life! good! Sheltering hills are the best for the good Fung-Shuy. "Every boat and junk carries its fender (from the evil Fung-Shuy) in the form of a bush attached to a staff and placed about the stern of the boat." "On level land certain trees are regarded as good fenders for graves."

A republican county convention in Illinois has resolved "that we do not desire a President whose mouth, like the Mississippi river, is always open."

Mr John G. Shurtz, Superintendent of the Moira Gold Mining Company, called in our office yesterday and exhibited a nugget of gold, of the value of $375, which is the product of eighteen tons of ore from the Moira Mine, crushed at the El Dorado Reduction Works. This gives $20 83c. to the ton. The Company we understand are having a lot of 100 tons crushed at the same works.—Belleville Intelligencer.

FROM MR RIDDELL.

MR REYNER has recently re-covered the Hammers of the Pianoforte used in my family with the new improved patent leather, and otherwise repaired it.
