THE LATE LORD BROUGHAM.

Henry Brougham, Baron Brougham and Vaux was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, on the 19th day of September, 1779. This is stated as set down by all writers who have published biographies of him, but, strangely enough, he does not appear to have known of his own age. It is related in this connection that in 1859 he wrote to the author of a book of poetry, "I perceive that you have put me, as having been born in 1779." His biographer inquired if that was not the fact. "I really cannot inform you," said "I am myself ignorant of the time. You should have asked my sister, who knew all about it, and I forgot to ask her before she went." The truth there may be in this, it seems to be tolerably certain whether he knew the precise date of his birth or not, he accepted the time set down by his biographers, for we find him in December, 1867, in a letter addressed to Count Jarnac, of France, referring to his having attained his eighty-ninth year.

He thus was descended from an ancient and highly respectable Westmoreland family, and was through his mother a nephew of the well known historian William Robertson. At an early age he was sent to the High School and College of Edinburgh, where he pursued his studies with distinguished success. Like the majority of youths, he was an active and laborious student of the more profound branches of learning, and was noted for his attention to mathematics and physical science.

After leaving the University, Mr Brougham travelled on the Continent, chiefly in Germany and Holland, and on his return to his native city was admitted to the bar in 1803. In 1803 he took an active part in the founding of the celebrated Edinburgh Review, to which periodical he became a valued contributor. His article on Sir James was admitted by the editor, Jeffrey, who wrote:—"After the third article he was admitted to our staff, and worth for us than anybody." The Review was established more as a political engine than for its profits as a commercial speculation, but after its success was assured the publisher volunteered to pay liberally for all contributions, instead of receiving gratuitously as was at first intended. At this time Mr Brougham's circumstances were somewhat limited, and his earnings for the Review added considerably to his income.

In 1808 Mr Brougham had already attained a notable reputation as an advocate. In 1810 he was counsel before the House of Lords for a body of English merchants who conceived themselves injured in their business by the orders of Napoleon, issued in retaliation of the Berlin and Milan decrees. On this occasion he spoke for seven hours at a time for two days, and his speech was remarkable for its eloquence, its learning and convincing argument. In 1812 he visited Liverpool with Mr Canning at the election, but failed to obtain a seat, and consequently absent from Parliament for four years. In 1816 he was elected member for Winchelsea, and signalized his first session by his opposition to the passing of the measures known as the Six Acts. In the great speech in Mr Brougham's name he had yet to come. Although he had had many circumstances have been those most distinguished men of age and have left a brilliant name behind, it is doubtful if his fame would ever have been so great had not the trial of Queen Caroline, wife of George the Fourth, afforded him, as it were, the cynosure of all eyes. He was Attorney General for the Queen at the time of the proceedings, and in defending the Queen, the management of which he found, the management of which he found, in fulfilling the duties of office, he delivered two speeches. One before the House of Lords on the trial of the Queen, and the other before the Privy Council on the argument for the coronation. The sympathies of the English people were strongly with the most wronged of women, the most injured Queen, it is equally true that the influence produced by these two speeches was astounding as it was electric. The Queen's military defence was so far as it was concerned, the most formidable prosecution ever known in English law, although it was broken down and was abandoned. After the death of the popular idol, and the Reform crisis of 1830 was the prominent figure of the House of Commons. In 1831 he established himself as a debater and as an advocate of legal and constitutional reform. His position as Attorney General to the Queen gave him for the time prominence at the bar, which prominence he took by his Majesty's death; but in 1830 he was unanimously invested with the silk gown. Early in the year 1830 Mr Brougham resigned the seat he held in Parliament (for Winchelsea) in consequence of disagreeing with the Wellington ministry on the question of reform, and he at the same time returned for Edinburgh, and remained its representative until the dissolution of Parliament consequent upon the death of George IV. and the accession of William IV. In 1830 he was elected for Knaresborough, he taking part in the struggle for emancipation. He at the same time had his profession as a barrister, and large practice, and leading numerous cases against James Scarlett in London and on the Northern Circuit. At that time, through the influence of George IV. he had not the advantage of the silk gown. After the dissolution of Parliament, Mr Brougham sought the suffrages of the electors of York and was elected by a decided majority. This was a great and decided triumph for him, as it was thought that the constituency was incapable of returning a candidate who could not boast of high and noble connexions. At last, however, it was deemed advisable to give him the Great Seal and peerage. He was accordingly installed in the office of Lord Chancellor, signalizing himself by his energy and ability in the passing of the Reform Bill, the Poor Law Bill, and other measures of law reform. It was the most celebrated speech in the House of Lords in favour of reform. On the morning of the debate he spoke for five hours, and his speech has since taken its place among the most formidable prose orations ever known in English law, although it was broken down and was abandoned. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

℞ For the rapid cure of Coughs, Colds, Influenza, Hoarseness, Croup, Bronchitis, Incipient Consumption, and for the relief of Consumptive Patients in advanced stages of the disease.

So wide is the field of its usefulness and so numerous are its cures, that in almost every section of country are persons publicly known, who have been restored by it from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs. When once tried, its superiority over every other expectorant is too apparent to escape observation, and where its virtues are known, the public no longer hesitate what antidote to employ for the distressing and dangerous affections of the pulmonary organs incident to our climate.

Prepared by Dr J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass., and sold by all Druggists and dealers in medicine everywhere.

The Florence Nightingale of the Nursery.

The following is an extract from a letter written by the Rev. C. Z. Weiser, to the German Reformed Messenger, at Chambersburg, Penn:

A Benefactress.

Just open the door for her, and Mrs Winslow will prove the American Florence Nightingale of the Nursery. Of this we are sure, that we will teach our "Susy" to say "A Blessing on Mrs. Winslow," for helping her to survive and escape the griping, colicking, and teething siege. We confirm every word set forth in the Prospectus. It performs precisely what it professes to perform, every part of it—nothing less. Away with your "Cordial" "Paregoric" "Drops" "Laudanum," and every other "Narcotic," by which the babe is drugged into stupidity and rendered dull and idiotic for life.

We have never seen Mrs Winslow—know her only through the preparation of her "Soothing Syrup for children teething." If we had the power, we would make her, as she is, a physical saviour to the Infant Race. 25 cents a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

Be sure and call for

"Mrs Winslow's Soothing Syrup,"

Having the fac-simile of "Curtis & Perkins" on the outside wrapper. All others are base imitations.

A "Cough," "cold," or Irritated Throat.

If allowed to progress, results in serious Pulmonary and Bronchial affections, oftentimes incurable.

Brown's Bronchial Troches

Reach directly the affected parts, and give almost instant relief. In Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrh they are beneficial. Obtain only the genuine Brown's Bronchial Troches, which have proved their efficacy by a test of many years. Among testimonials attesting their efficacy are letters from—
