AND GRADE HORSES. We having the following stallions in service or the season of 1890.

VON LEER.

Young Hamble, onian Stallion. Foaled June let, 1835. Stands 15% hands high, weight 1100 pounds. Is bright bay, black points. Has fine style and good action. As a representative for getting good roadsters is hard to beat.

"Von Leer" was sired by George O. (9701), by Lakeland Abitaliah (351). First dam by Patchen, by Autocrat, Second dam Dolly by Gifford Morgan.

CHANCELLOR, JR.

Having purchased a very fine imported Clydesdale stallion, Chancellor Jr., for our own use, will breed a limited number of mares outside. Chancellor Jr. is 9 years old this spring; is a Cherry Bay with black points; 16% hands high and weighs about 1700 pounds; strong, clean limbs, fine action, mill disposition. He was sired by Chancellor, (1310), he by Drew Pinnee of Wales, (673). Nam by Loft, (1517); great-grand-dam by Sir William Wallace, (394). He combines in his breeding the best blood Scotland ever had, and has proven his ability to get uniform colts, of great size, fine form, strong and runged.

CHAMPION, JR.

The Perchon Morgan Herse. He has proven himself a fine stock getter for general purposes, and cannot be Jeaten in the Northwest. Parties who intend breeding the coming season, will find it to their advantage to call and see our stock and get our terms, which will be reasonable.

Jokes on Corporal Tanner. Corporal Tanner enjoys a good joke

even on himself, and tells the following

"I was at a hotel, and a colored boy happening in the room as I was about to retire, I asked him to pull off my shoes. Now, anyone who knows me understands my condition, and will understand what it means to pull off my shoes [the Corhas artificial limbs to both knees]. I had unfastened the straps, and knowing what would come, I awaited developments. The boy took hold and pulled, and-off came a portion of my leg. The poor fellow stood aghast, staring speechlessly at what he had done, and then, throwing down the artificial limb, he fled. I yelled for him to come back, that it was all right, and, somewhat reassured, he came back, and I told him to pull off the other shoe. He took hold of it, but rather gingerly, and then gave a pull, and lo and behold, he held another shoe and part of a leg in his hands. He didn't stop but dropped it as he ran. Gracious. how he did get out of that room! Would he come back for my calling? Not a bit of it. He had no further use for me." The Corporal tells another one. He the year.

was in San Francisco, and was taken with pneumonia, and for days it was thought to be all up with him. One morning as he lay white and exhausted and apparently dying, Major B., the landlord came in, as was his wont, to inquire after the patient. "I was conwas a very kind man and had done all in his power for me. 'How is the sick man' they cold?' Then I heard my wife say after a little pause: 'Well, I don't know, Major, but you can see for yourself. There are his feet by the window.' There was a dead silence. I was too sick to see how he looked when he got that information but my wife told me about it afterward. The Major appreciated the humor in it and while I was convalescing we all laughed over it many a time.—Cincinnati

Heroes and Heroes.

Times-Star.

General Lee viewed secession with horror. His first position was that he would content himself with not drawing his sword against his own people. This position he abandoned for a second one in which he announced his intention of drawing his sword only for the defense of his native State. This second position he abandoned for a third one, from which he made his raids that ended at Antietam and Gettysburg. Morally, he was swept back from line to line by the force of public opinion within the Confederacy, just as in the physical contest he was forced back from the Wilderness to the Appomattox apple tree by the military forces of the Union. The man who in two such contests, abandons what conscience and ambition urge him to maintain, and does that which he is unwilling to do, is not of the stuff of which heroes are made. George H. Thomas, another Virginian, holding at the outstart views similar to Lee's, and subjected to the same family, social and political influences, won both the moral and physical victory, while Lee won neither. If the Virginians will erect a statue to their fellow-Virginian, Thomas, an uudoubted hero, the New York Seventh will doubtless be glad to participate in the Senator Hoar has introduced a bill providing for a pension of $50 a month to the only surviving delegator of Admiral Winslow. She is now living in Roxbury, a confirmed invalid. In 1887, Congress, by a special act granted a pension of $50 a month to the

of his invaluable services to the country but at her death recently, it lapsed. It is now merely proposed to extend the same recognition to the daughter. Admiral Winslow won an enviable place in history as the commander of the nois, 32,313; Indiana, 25,165; Massa- Kearsarge in the short and sharp battle when it defeated and sank the Confederate cruiser Alabama, which had long been the terror of Northern commerce. "Neverwas a more just debt owed than the equalization of bounties. One of the most unjustifiable things that the Goverment did was to pay the men who came out the third year of the war $200 more bounty than those who had already served two years. It virtually fined those who had come out first $200 for preservation of the Union should receive the substantial and merited recognition being so prompt to respond to its call. Not but what those who came out after September, 1863, deserved every cent of the $300 bounty which the Government gave them. At the prices of greenbacks which prevailed this represents less than which will give to every soldier, sailor $150 in the money of to-day, which was a small inducement indeed for a man to leave his home, and the high wages of the time, and march into the bloody hell of $8 per month, and to all who served a the wilderness. or the protracted nande. the wilderness, or the protracted pandemonium of the Atlanta Campaign. But the veterans of the two years' fighting should have been put on a level, so far as the Government's payments to them, with the new levies. The long delay of Congress to repair this injustice, as far as possible, is inexcusable."

The Department of Georgia, being the smallest department in the Grand Army and containing the greatest number of Federal dead, appeals to comrades of the other departments for contribution to enable them to suitable decorate the graves of the 40,000 or more Uuion soldiers who are buried at Marietta, Andersonville, Beaufort, and Florence. If there is at that age a weakening of physical activity which incapacitates army officers for duty, surely it is not unwise to recognize the same principle in its application to the case of our volunteer soldiers and seamen. As to the disability feature of the bill, it ought not to be necessary to point out that after all its pronises to the veterans and after all they have done in its behalf, the country can ill afford to permit old soldiers and sailors dependent on their own exertions to have to resort to the poor-house when
