Clubs.

SIR,—Once upon a time there was a young man named Mark Tapley who used to go in search of circumstances of the most melancholy nature, to enable him "to come out strong," as he expressed it, for he considered that no credit was due to any one for being jolly when surrounded with every thing that would tend to make him so. If M. Tapley was a lover of sports I mean sport in its widest sense which includes games of all kinds and all manly exercises,—and we have every reason to believe that he did,—it is a great pity he did not make Kingston his destination instead of Eden for assuredly he would have made it his place of residence permanently because of the wide field he would have for the exercise of his peculiar talents, and because he would have been saved the trouble of searching.

This conclusion has been forced upon us by the experience we have had in this city of the perfect knowledge all seem to possess of the way how not to do things. Were we to search in the musty records of the past, we might find that at one period of the year there did exist in Kingston clubs, rinks, &c., that could exhibit some signs of vitality. Where are they now?

To begin with the cricket club, the strongest numerically and pecuniarily of all the clubs which used to hold up its head with the best in the Province. Last season, with such a large number to select from, this club did not play one foreign match, and even the eleven got up to play home matches were nutted with the greatest difficulty, in some cases men who never handled a bat were forced to make up the number. It cannot be expected that foreign clubs are to be at the expense of coming to Kingston, always to play matches. Unless the visit be returned, and unless greater enthusiasm is displayed next season, of course the club will go the way of all Kingston clubs. It has shown the first signs of disease, but it is not too late to apply a remedy!

Next, in order, comes the foot-ball club originated by a stranger, and mainly supported by those who are resident here temporarily. This club had but a short, livid existence for the second season snapped the slender cord, and the Kingston youths, instead of meeting in friendly rivalry at this splendid game, retired to their old haunt, Princess Street, where they are yet to be seen every afternoon aimlessly promenading up and down twisting a cane and an incipient moustache to, turns, and ogling at every passing damsel.

Again, there is the skating rink, which, of all others, shows unmistakeably that the knowledge spoken of at the beginning of this letter, is possessed by its managers in the highest degree. Instead of opening at the beginning of winter, they wait until the season is half over, when all prefer to be outside sleighing, snow-shoeing, &c., &c., and when they do open, of course they do not take into consideration that it is necessary, in order to secure members, to reduce the subscription very considerably—but then that would never do; it would not be so select you know. Just look inside the rink any afternoon and behold the result of this niggardly policy: one or two Bank Clerks and about half a dozen other children make the sum total of those present.

It is not so long ago since we used to see a number of those, who are certainly past that time of life when cricketing or skating can be enjoyed, meet in the curling rink and do battle right valiantly with broom and hand.

Why can they not meet as of yore and make the rink resound with the jovial shouts of "soop her up." It is almost appalling to see our worthy seniors walk along the street with elongated visage, as if they were conveying another $1,000 day by day to its last resting place in some Nova Scotia gold mine.

My object in making these remarks must not be mis-understood. It is far from any desire to throw cold water on projects such as the one now set on foot for a gymnasium. On the contrary it is my wish by citing examples to show that no scheme whatever will be successful unless taken up heartily and with unanimity. There is no reason why Kingston should not have as good a gymnasium as any city in Canada, if the young men will only set earnestly to work, determined that their efforts shall be crowned with success.

Yours truly,
GRUMBLER.

SMALL POX IN NEW YORK.—This terrible disease, which it was fain hoped had been all but eradicated by means of vaccination, has in many places proved itself to be as virulent as of old. It has been fearfully prevalent in New York for some months back, the total number of cases there since the 1st of October last being no less than 800. The number of cases reported to be now, in that city are 160, and the number of deaths in November were 70. The disease rages almost exclusively in the poorer and more crowded wards of the city, and amongst the citizens of foreign birth. Precautions, by means of vaccination, and otherwise, are being taken, but the disease does not as yet seem disposed to succumb to these.

Kingston ice merchants may take some comfort from the following:

WHAT IS TO BE DONE?—The ice dealers and lovers of mint juleps, sangarees, lemonades and other decoctions requiring ice are beginning to entertain fears that the supply this year will be rather small. So far, no ice worth saving has formed, and as the season is well advanced, they fear that the supply of good pure ice will be very small. There is, of course, ample time yet to procure a good supply, but to judge by the past the chances for freezing will be few. We may, however, obtain a supply from Toronto, Kingston, or other cold latitudes.—St. Catharines Journal.

A Lie Nailed.

"The fabrications of the Globe are becoming notorious fast and furious just now. How it does pile on the agony on these occasions. It has thrown off all appearance of fairness, and manufactures its slanders out of whole cloth. Formerly it was the practice with that journal to mix a column of truth with a great deal of falsehood, but it is now becoming more reckless as it witnesses the growing power and strength of the Government, and the chances of a Grit Government's advent to power growing smaller by degrees and beautifully less. The Globe's freshest lie is that connected with the Hon. Mr. Howe's visit to the Red River, wherein that honorable gentleman is charged with having stirred up the half-breeds to insurrection! Any person possessed of a modicum of brains must have known that a Cabinet Minister of the tact, ability, and great political experience of the member for Hants, could not have been guilty of so grave an error, if not a crime, as to counsel those semi-barbarians to take up arms against a Government of which he is so prominent a member! The violation of his oath of office, and the treason to his colleagues and to his country, one would suppose would be sufficient to restrain him beyond the mere fact of the political and personal ruin it would entail upon himself. The Globe knew how absurd all this would appear, but true to its instincts, and pursuing a blind, reckless course, it gave utterance to the vile falsehood, and to-day we publish the following contradiction, taken from the Ottawa Citizen, and which, no doubt, is made in the authority of the hon. gentleman himself:—

"We are authorized to state, on the very highest authority, that the stories reported in the Toronto Globe, respecting the sayings and doings of the Hon. Joseph Howe whilst visiting Red River, are utterly false and without foundation. Mr Howe seldom had the opportunity of speaking to any person there in private, gentlemen from Canada of the highest respectability being almost invariably present. If any of Mr. Brown's followers choose to bring these stories up before Parliament, Mr. Howe will be prepared to defend himself, and to explain every act done by him whilst at Red River, and going and returning. Why should the Globe desire to circulate falsehoods?"

It is utterly useless for the Globe to continue in its course of slander and vituperation. It has cried wolf, wolf, so often, that the people have at length grown deaf to calumnies, and refuse any longer to put faith in anything the Globe may say. We would give a week's subscription of the Whig to be present at the next Session of Parliament to hear the Nestor of the House—the old man eloquent—giving "his" to the real promoter of dissension in the North West. For it cannot be denied that the Hon. George Brown has sought with might and main to fan up rebellion amongst the savages of the North West, with the hope of embarrassing the Government in its future plans of settlement of that country."

EXECUTION OF TRAUTMANN.

Paris, Jan. 19, (7 30 p.m.)

Traupmann, the murderer of the Kinck family was executed at 7 o'clock this morning. Notwithstanding the early hour, the execution was witnessed by a great crowd, who taunted and yelled at him as he mounted the scaffold. The culprit was very pale, but ascended courageously and with a firm step. After embracing the priest he cried out in a loud voice, "I persist I have accomplices." These were the last words he uttered. Extraordinary precautions were taken to guard against disorder. The police and military were on the ground in great force, but their services have not been needed up to this hour.

Five Children Burned to Death in Detroit.

The Detroit Free Press of the 14th inst. publishes the particulars of a dreadful catastrophe which occurred in this city on Sunday, the 12th, by the burning of a grocery store and saloon, kept by a Frenchman named Deconistin, in the second storey of which the family resided. About eight o'clock in the evening, some neighbors living opposite, heard dreadful screaming and shouting of children, and upon going into the street (White Street) they saw flames bursting out of the windows of the shop, and the smoke had just commenced pouring out of the windows in the second storey, and through the clapboards and roof. The shrieks of the fated children in the house were most appalling. The alarm soon spread, and speedily a crowd gathered to witness the agonizing spectacle. As soon as a ladder was procured and placed against a window sill, the Free Press says, "not the flames were curling around its ends, and the black smoke fell to the ground in great rolls, and for one moment the crowd looked each other in the face. There was children dying within—it looked like death to go up, but the next moment, Mr. Piton, a relative of the family, sprang up the rounds, beating back the flames with his cap. Up, up, and through the fire and smoke, and into the window, and men and women held their breaths. But, when men said that he was lost, the form of Piton was again seen at the window, on the ladder, coming down, his hair singed and blazing, his clothes burned and burning, and he brought down a child, whose clothes blazed fiercely, but both were attended to when the ground was reached, and though women were weeping at the faint moans yet heard inside, and strong men were shuddering over the terrible fate of those yet roasting in the flames, there went up a cheer for the brave man who so nobly perilled his young life for the salvation of the little girl."

By the time the fire engines arrived on the spot the fire had enwrapped the whole building and all that could be done was to drench the flames from the ruins. When the fire was out, then, shuddering at the sight which they knew would meet their vision underneath, the rubbish, a hundred men commenced a search for the bodies of the victims.

Right at the foot of the stairs, or where the stairs had been, when a few charred and smoking boards were removed, the crisped and charred bodies of the five children were found. In her arms, held as if trying to shield its little body from the fire, the young girl, aged fifteen, was found with a little sister tightly clasped to her bosom. So strong was her grasp, that her burned arms could not be unlocked, and, when she saw that death must come, she had met the flames first holding the little one as if until the lapping tongues of fire had enveloped them both. The other bodies were found grouped about the sister seeming, as was natural, to have looked to her for protection in the fearful trial, while the poor sister could only see them die with her.

After a time, the remains were taken up and conveyed to the residence of Mr. Piton, where they were laid in coffins, and where they were viewed by hundreds sympathetic citizens, on Monday. Four coffins held the five, the oldest sister, with the little one in her arms being placed in one."

Nothing was elicited at the Coroner's inquest to establish the cause of the fire. The principal testimony was that of Mrs. Emire Phon DeConissih, who said:—"I was in the house at the time the fire was discovered; was on the first of the bed, where my little boy was lying sick. The first I heard of it, my oldest girl began to scream out that there was a fire down stairs. I went down stairs and went into the store and saw the fire was there; in the front corner of the store, about ten feet from the stove, there was a large tin can with about a gallon of kerosene oil in it, standing on a barrel; the fire was blazing up to the ceiling; the store was locked, and my husband was away; the stove was in its proper position; I passed it twice, going to and from the front door; passed between the counter and stove; the stove was one we used both wood and coal in; I was in the store waiting on a customer before six o'clock; was also in about seven o'clock. When I went down stairs, I found the door locked, (the shop door) and tried to get an axe to break it open; could not find one; then ran up stairs, caught my boy from the bed and carried him down, telling the other children to follow. The stairs and door were in the back part of the house; I ran out at the door; the smoke was very thick, and my boy was burned as I passed out; I threw him upon the snow as he was, in his slip only, and ran back to get the rest, but the smoke and fire came out so that I could not get in; the door was not shut at all, but the smoke and fire prevented me getting in. I am sure the children were following me down stairs, when I came out, but I think they had not the courage to rush through the fire as I did and so went back up stairs; two children were saved, the little boy about six years old I brought out myself, and the little girl whom some person got out of the window."

It is stated by the little girl who was saved that the oldest sister took the babe, the brother took the next younger, aged five years, while she clung to him behind, and they all started to go down stairs. In this they failed, being driven back by the smoke, and the little girl succeeded in getting back as far as the window, when the smoke rolled out in volumes, just as King, who was on the ladder, reached in his hand and by chance caught hold of her garments, and she was thus saved.

There was an insurance on the goods of $600, and on the furniture of $800, the policies having issued only on the 4th December last. The Free Press remarks:—

The excess to be a mystery about it, and no explanation or theory is received with satisfaction. Even if the flames originated from carelessness, the calamity which they brought is fearful enough. But if the touch of an incendiary caused the holocaust of young and innocent life, the vengeance of the people would exact another tragedy. One can but hope that the mystery will soon be brushed away.

At the inquest it was proved that it was John King, jr., who saved the little girl, age ten years, not Piton.

BRUTAL EXPRESSION.—A brutal prize fight took place at Newtown, L.I., the other evening. Thomas Carnochan and Michael Kilpatrick matched their respective weights for a mill without regard to the rules of the prize ring, the only conditions being that the weakest man who was unable to come to time was to be deemed a cribber. The stake was a barrel of whiskey. The room in which the women fought was packed with the friends and relatives of both families. The women were shortly dressed, and their backs and arms were uncovered. Their entrance was announced by the spectators with a wild yell of delight, and the battle was at once begun without bonnets, shades or squares. For forty minutes the degraded women fought like fiends, and were all the while encouraged by the brutal spectators. On the expiration of the forty minutes, Mrs. Carnochan fell in a faint fight, and the Kilpatrick faction retired in triumph. The two men were arrested for cruel treatment of their wives.

AN OBTUSE SHERIFF.—An American paper defends the humanity shown by the civil authority to criminals condemned to death. It frequently happens that the judge or sheriff chooses the day most convenient to the victim: "Will Thursday suit you?"—"No, it is the 13th. I fear it may bring me ill luck." "Well, then, the following day?"—"Your Honor forgets that it's Friday." "That's so; but on Saturday I have business, and Sunday won't do, so we must put it off till Monday."—"Very well, Monday will suit me perfectly." Even after this the culprit, who took part in the foregoing conversation, made some difficulties. He had but one more request to make. He was a musician? Might he be allowed to spend his last hours in singing a few quartets with some friends? His request was granted, and when the Sheriff came he observed, "Music generally accompanies a dance, this time it has preceded it."

The right of appeal to the Privy Council in England will not, we learn, be abolished by the new law.

INDIANS AT FORT GARRY.

St. Paul Minn., 19.

The correspondent of the St. Paul's Press says a report has reached us from Fort Garry, to the effect that a large number of Indians, accompanied by a showman, had arrived there, but they soon left to return to their camps, after assuring the French insurgents that they would fight on their side, if a call was made on them.

FOUL MURDER.—St. Hyacinthe, Jan. 18.—Saturday last a murder was committed at Brompton Falls, Eastern Townships, by a late conductor on the Grand Trunk named Knapp, who killed a man named McGovran. A quarrel arose between the two parties in a bar room kept at Brompton Falls, and Knapp stabbed his victim with his knife in the neck and breast. McGovran died yesterday morning. An inquest was held and the murderer committed for trial. There is a curious coincidence in the case. McGovran's father was stabbed and killed in the same manner a few years ago in New Jersey.
