WEDN'SDAY EVEN'G, JULY 16, 1873.

A PICTURE.

BY JOAQUIN MILLER.

Once, morn by morn, when snowy mountains flamed
With sudden shafts of light that shot a flood,
Into the vale, like fiery arrows aimed
At night from mighty battlements, there stood
Upon a cliff, high limmed against Mount Hood,
A matchless bull, fresh forth from sable wold,
And, standing so, seemed grander 'gainst the wood
Than winged bull that stood with tips of gold
Beside the brazen gates of Babylon of old.

A time he tossed the dewy turf, and then
Stretched forth his wrinkled neck, and long and loud
He called above the far abodes of men
Until his mouth became a curling cloud
And wreathed about his neck a misty shroud.
He then, as sudden as he came, passed on
With lifted head, majestic and most proud;
And lone as night, in deepest wood withdrawn,
He roamed in silent rage until another dawn.

What drove the hermit from the valley herd?
What cross of love, what cold neglect of kind,
Or scorn of unpretending worth, had stirred
The stubborn blood and drove him forth to find
A fellowship in mountain, cloud and wind,
I oftime wondered much, and oftime thought
The beast betrayed a royal monorch's mind
To lift above the low herd's common lot,
And make them hear him still when they had fain forget.

Harvest Prospects.

Our American exchanges contain reports which indicate that fears are entertained for the safe ingathering of crops in several States of the Union. While in the Western States the ripening or half-cut crops of grain have been beaten down by the frequent gales and rotted by the pouring rains, in some of the Eastern States the crops are suffering from the drought. The States which have suffered most from the super-abundance of rain are Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, and the last named States seems to have been peculiarly unfortunate. In the southern and central counties for two weeks preceding July 8th not one day had passed without a rain-storm. The lowlands were flooded and the grain in many places was sprouting in the stock. The disasters occurred so late in the season that it will be impossible to repair the damage, although a week or two of fine weather would now make a very great difference. On the other hand, in a large part of New York, New Jersey and New England the lack of rain, has been injurious to the crops. The hay which is now harvesting is much lighter than it promised to be two weeks ago. The grain in many places has ceased to develop, and is turning to maturity unseasonably. The corn and the potatoes are of course suffering, but being later crops may recover some of the lost ground with a few weeks of favorable weather. Fruit is suffering from these causes in all the Northern States. The farmers of the East and West generally are praying for a mutual exchange of conditions, for a short season at least, to bring them relief.

Effect of Imagination.

Many years ago a celebrated French physician, author of an excellent work on the effects of imagination, wished to combine theory with practice, in order to confirm the truth of his propositions. To this end, he begged the Minister of Justice in Paris to allow him to try an experiment on a criminal condemned to death. The minister consented, and delivered to him an assassin of distinguished rank. The physician sought the culprit, and thus addressed him:—"Several persons who are interested in your family have prevailed on the judge not to require of you to mount the scaffold, and expose yourself to the gaze of the populace. He has therefore commuted your sentence, and sanctions your being bled to death, within the precincts of your prison; your dissolution will be gradual and free from any pain."

The criminal submitted to his fate, thinking his family would be less disgraced, and considered it a favor not to be compelled to walk to the place of public execution. He was conducted to the appointed room, where every preparation was made beforehand; his eyes were bandaged; he was strapped to a table; and, at a preconcerted signal, four of his veins were gentle pricked with the point of a pin. At each corner of the table was a small fountain of water, so contrived as to flow gently into basins placed to receive it. The patient, believing that it was his blood flowing, gradually became weak, and the conversation of the doctors in an undertone confirm him in this opinion.

"What fine blood!" said one. "What a pity this man should be condemned to die! he would have lived a long time."

"Hush!" said the other; and then, approaching the first, he asked him in a low voice, but so as to be heard by the criminal, "how many pounds of blood are there in the human body?"

"Twenty-four; you see already about ten pounds are extracted; that man is now in a hopeless state."

The physicians then receded by slow degrees, and continued to lower their voices. The stillness which reigned in the apartment, broken only by the dripping fountains, the sound of which was gradually lessened, so affected the brain of the poor patient that, although a man of very strong constitution, he fainted, and died without having lost a drop of blood.

A Contrast.

A naval review was held at Spithead on the 23rd of June, 1773. George III. was then King, and his Majesty left Kew about 4 a.m., reaching Portsmouth at 11 on the morning of the 22nd, and after receiving addresses from the corporation and other authorities, proceeded to Spithead, and embarked on board the Barfleur, of 90 guns, and dined at what was then the fashionable hour—3:30 p.m. The next day the King passed in review 20 sail of the line, and visited the Britannia, a first-rate of 100 guns, the Royal William, a second-rate of 84 guns, and the Defence, a third-rate of 64 guns. The King was proud of his fleet, which was then deemed invincible; but if on Monday, says the Pall Mall Gazette, of June 24th, it had been still in existence and attacked by a hostile Devastation, not a vestige of it would be in a defensive condition in 20 minutes, while the Devastation would be uninjured and quite ready to engage 20 or more of the same kind of ships. George III. left Portsmouth on the 26th of June at 6:45 a.m., and reached Kew about 2 p.m. The Shah left London on Monday at 8 o'clock, arrived at Portsmouth at 10, reviewed the fleet, visited the dockyard, received addresses, was entertained at a banquet, got back to London at half-past seven, and, after dining, went to Albert-hall, where the glories of Ranelagh 100 hundred years ago were as much eclipsed as the fleet of Vice-Admiral Pye was by that commanded by Admiral Sir G. Rodney Mundy.

THE PACIFIC SCANDAL.—The Gazette, in response to Mr. McMullen's attack upon its disinterestedness, says:

"We demand from Mr. McMullen, and we offer the use of our columns for that purpose, the particulars of the statement he makes respecting this journal. In the meantime we pronounce as utterly false the statement that we ever solicited, or received, or had the hope of receiving, or in any way bargained to receive, any consideration whatever in connection with this Pacific Railway, or in connection with any other enterprise with which Sir Hugh Allan was connected."

Since the press seems destined to be the chief means of dragging these Canada Pacific intrigues to light, it is to be desired that all who know anything about them will come forward and make a clean breast of it, so that we may have the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth in regard to them.

"AN INSANE PROCEEDING."—This is the first heading of a short article in the last number of the Chicago Sunday Times, giving a description of the suicide of a German in that city, and the second heading of the article reads thus: "A Teuten, while suffering from mental derangement, unlocks the hereafter with a Remington revolver." We think this a very mild way of stating that a man has committed suicide.

The wealth of Astor is now computed at two hundred millions. The property of old John Jacob Astor, the father of William B. Astor, was left by him in trust for the benefit of his heirs. After the expiration of the trusteeship, which will occur at the end of the third generation—that is, after the grandchildren have passed away—it will then be divided among all the descendants of the old man, the law not allowing the trusteeship of that kind to extend for a longer period of time.

The Worcester (Mass.) Gazette says: "They who wish to advertise judiciously and cheaply can find no better medium through which to reach the great public than through Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Agency, New York.
