THURSDAY EVEN'G, JULY 17, 1873.

SPIRITS OF THE SEA.

Over the wave and under the wave
And through the waters deep,
We dash, and splash, and merrily play,
While whirlwinds are asleep;
Nor spirits of earth nor spirits of heaven
More merrisome than we,
The spirits that live in the ocean wave,
That live in the deep blue sea.

From the foamy crest to the ocean's breast
Down to the dark glide we,
And there we play full many a day
With the wonders of the sea.
We bind our hands with silvery bands,
Of warriors strong and fair,
And our fingers twirl in the golden curl
Of the maidens' flowing hair.

All among the wrecks and through the decks
Of warships high and long,
We swifter pass than the lightning flash
So cheerily with a song;
And light on the face of the sailor's youth
A kiss, then fly away,
Up, up to the earth, the scene of his birth
To the mellow beams of day.

Monsters we sweep from the pathless deep,
And lay each crystal shell,
A sandy bed remains of the dead,
We guard with a mystic spell.
With wind and with waves and ocean's strength,
With the might of earth fight we,
The spirits that live in the ocean wave,
That live in the deep blue sea.

A Good Watch Dog.

For many years past Hiram Ripley, a teamster, living on Fort street, below the railroad bridge, had been thinking he ought to have a good watch dog around the house and barn, as his wife was much of the time alone, and as bad boys frequently raid his barn for old junk. So the other day, when a farmer came along with a big bendle dog under his waggon, and wanted to sell him for $5, Ripley criticised the canine, inquired as to his merits, and said it was a trade. He tied the dog up in a woodshed, fed him bountifully, and he went into the country after a load of potatoes with a light heart, believing that no human being could come fooling around his house and live long. He was gone over night, and it was afternoon Friday before he returned home. He drove up to the barn, and went in by the stable door to throw open the big doors. He had just got on the main floor when a buzz-saw began ripping up and down his leg. He thought it was a buzz-saw, but it was'nt; it was that watch dog of his. Mrs. Ripley, desiring to go off to a relative's had turned the dog into the barn, and he was watching, as was his business. Ripley yelled, "Oh! hokey to sal tpetre," as he felt the grinding at his leg, and he made a long skip into a corner, and faced about and saw the dog. The old canine deliberately picked the woolen and flesh out of his teeth, and was then ready for business. His eyes were fixed on Ripley's lower vest button, his stump tail stood up straight, and his fore legs had an uneasy motion, as if he wanted to reach out something.

"Nice old fellow" began Ripley, thinking to beguile the dog; "good doggy—nice doggy—dont you know me?" The dog seemed to have heard the voice before, and he sat down and lost a little of the fierce look. This encouraged Ripley, and he started to go out, but he had taken but a few steps when the dog took half a yard from the back of his coat, and brought away a piece of the flesh. Ripley fell over the peck measure and the dog took another mouthful, but did not pursue to the corner.

"Oh! jewittaker to Jerusalem!" groaned the dog buyer, as he leaned up against a barrel and saw the dog calmly ruminating over the last mouthful.

The canine sat up again and smacked his lips, and uttered a low growl, which reverberated around the barn like thunder. He closed one eye and peeped at Ripley with the other, and then moved his paws around with that reckless, uneasy manner before mentioned. Ripley began yelling for help, but he hadn't yelled more than three times when the dog checked him with a look that spoke volumes. Then he went at the beguiling business again. "Here, Tiger," he called, snapping his fingers, "nice Tiger—best dog in Detroit—poor old doggy." Tiger uttered a whine and boat "Ben Butler's Dream" on the floor with his stump narrative, while a tear of tender love stole into one eye. The thing was all right now, and Ripley started out again, keeping his back behind him. He had half crossed the floor when he felt buzz saws and red-hot irons and pitchforks jabbing him all over. He went up and came down, turned handsprings and jumped from the trapeze, and in a moment was back in the corner, and the old dog was sitting up as before. Ripley couldn't sit down, and he didn't feel like standing up, and so he leaned up against the barrel and recklessly abused and insulted the dog. He called him an old loafer, a carpet-bagger, and a Mormon, and then went on and abused every one of the canine relatives back to the great grandfather.

At length, after being a prisoner for nearly three hours, some boys discovered the man's situation. By his direction they went for a grocer who keeps a revolver, and the grocer came and released the prisoner by shooting the dog. Ripley came up town to have the wounds dressed, and they numbered twenty-three different bites and were impartially distributed over a large extent of territory. However, there's nothing like keeping a family watch dog.—Detroit Free Press.

Riel in Manitoba.

Riel continues to figure very markedly in Manitoba. At merry-makings as well as political meetings he occupies a prominent, if not a first place, and is apparently the observed of all observers. At the late fete at St. Boniface, in celebration of Jean Baptiste's day, the ex-President read the address to the Archbishop, made two or three speeches, and among all the leaders of the Metis, had ostentatiously rendered to him the first place. What does Sir John say about that? Now is his time to "catch" this offender. He gives not the slightest hint of fear, and all the rewards upon his head don't frighten him away. What hinders, then, his apprehension? Riel, like other people, professes to have documents, the production of which would be very damaging to the Federal Ministers. Can this be so?—Globe.

—When the Shah visited the Queen at Windsor he saluted Her Majesty with the most perfect delicacy and grace, and said that hitherto he had reckoned his years from the day of his birth, but that in future he should date them from his meeting the Queen of England.

THINGS IN GENERAL.

—"Weight for the waggon," sang the fat lady.

—Spots on the sun—Freckles of your boy's face.

—An Orillia household is enjoying an area of peace. The lady of the house put her tongue to a flat-iron to see if it was hot.

—The Royal Halifax Yacht Club have taken the initiative in the reception of the Governor General.

—Orders were received from England by cable for the flying squadron at Halifax to sail for Gibraltar on Saturday next.

—The old gentleman who put his postal card in a stamped envelope is matched by an Omaha man who has his money orders sent by registered letter.

—Ladies of the demi-monde in Lexington, Ky., are to be incontinently arrested if they ride or drive in any vehicle through the "streets, cemetery, or other public places" of the city.

—The gold medals ordered by the Dominion Government for the eight marksmen of the last Wimbledon team, have arrived in Ottawa, and will forthwith be distributed.

—Some of the enterprising New York journals, being unable to obtain permission to send correspondents to the Tigress, overcome the difficulty by causing their correspondents to enlist as seamen.

—The locomotive of a Western express train collided with a hand-car, and smashed the head-light. The conductor was equal to the occasion. He just stuck his diamond breast-pin in the cow-catcher, and the train moved right along.

—As an evidence of the force and effect of the great storm at Fond du Lac, Wis., and vicinity, in one county 250 barns were demolished. Wrecked buildings, prostrated orchards and badly damaged fields mark the track of the hurricane through several counties.

—The present U.S. Custom House valuation of the English sovereign, or pound sterling, is $4,84, but a law of Congress, passed last winter, to take effect January 1st, 1874, changes the valuation to $5,86⅔ which is the exact value by weight, and is the par of exchange between Great Britain and the United States.

—A lady in Providence was accosted a few evenings ago by a stranger, who handed her a new purse, containing a sum of money which he had stolen from her three years before. He simply remarked, "I took it. I was in bad company, and was tempted, but I never meant to keep it."

The Worcester (Mass.) Gazette says: "They who wish to advertise judiciously and cheaply can find no better medium through which to reach the great public than through Geo. P. Rowell & Co's Agency, New York.
