Good Morning Baby.

BY R. C.

Good morning little stranger, I have come to see you now, I have come to bid you welcome to this world of our's below; Open wide your blue eyes little one, look on this smiling earth, It is clothed with light and sunshine, it is crowned with joy and mirth.

'Tis a lovely world, for on it Nature has lavished free Kind gifts on fruits and flowers in woodland, vale and lea, And stately trees uplift their heads, while flitting to and fro Bright birds give answering music to the streamlet's rippling flow.

A father's strong arm guards thee, a mother's loving smile
Lights up as it rests on thy pure young face unspotted by sin or guile, And sweet sister's gentle kisses falls softly on thy cheek
As wee brother touches wonderingly thy hand so frail and weak.

Alas that sin and sorrow should enter world so fair, Alas to think that childish brow should e'er be marred with care,
To think the baby heat that now but love and kindness know, Shall one sad day have learned to feel the pangs of grief and woe.

For after all dear baby though bright this world may be,
Though clothed with light and beauty is earth and sky and sea, Human thoughts and human feelings, trials and sins have made,
Our life upon this lovely world less of sunshine than of shade.

But wee stranger as thy way is marked through this world of storms and ills.
Small be thy share of sorrow that of sin be smaller still,
And when in years declining life's shadows lengthen fast,
All thy griefs and troubles over, sleep sweetly on Jesus breast

Washington Letter.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Washington, D C, Jan. 12, 1878

Yesterday was notable in Washington as the day on which Congress assembled, and not otherwise. And there was nothing of especial interest in the Congressional proceedings, except that the Republicans, returning more promptly than the Democrats from their holiday recess, controlled the House for the most of the day. Your correspondent was born with politics left out of his composition, but enjoys the strife of men for supremacy, whether in one walk of life or another. In this Congress, especially in the House, so far, the Democrats seem to have lacked a leader. On questions of importance their actual majority has become a minority, and shrewd Republicans have carried their points almost invariably. When Congress adjourned, the immediate question before the House was as to whether the various committees should commence an investigation of the various Departments, with power to send for persons and papers. This came up again yesterday, and though there was no final vote, the Republicans succeeded in carrying an amendment which practically nullifies the effect of the measure. There is a call for a leader on the Democratic side of the House.

In the Senate Mr Conkling introduced a resolution looking to enquiry into the restoration of several officers, long out of service by dismissal, to the Army and Navy. This, it is understood, is an indirect attack upon the President, who has perhaps allowed his good nature to be imposed upon in these matters and in the pardon of criminals convicted in the Courts. It is an amiable weakness, however, and I doubt if much political capital can be made out of it against the Chief Magistrate.

This week we have had here a convention of several hundred citizens from all parts of the country, discussing a profoundly interesting question, and not one of the delegates has been disorderly in the streets, has visited a bar-room, been heard to utter an oath, or in any other way behaved disreputably. I wonder if such another convention was ever known in any city in America? We sometimes laugh at these women who get together in conventions and demand suffrage, but, after all, the class of citizens that made up the convention I speak of must by and by get what it asks for. Right or wrong it is only a question of time.

The United States Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories in charge of Prof. F. V. Hayden made an extended tour of exploration in the Western Territories during the past spring and summer season, and returned to this city, the headquarters of the Survey, late in the fall, laden with the results of a most interesting and important character. The information of a paleontological character is especially important, as this character of investigation was carried on in a more systematic and extensive plan than ever before, and the result will prove both interesting and important. The topographical work covered an area of about 30,000 square miles, and a comparatively unknown region of our waste domain, possessing remarkable capacity for mining, grazing and agriculture; which will be made known. The explorations of this Survey have extended from Arizona to Montana, embracing the territories of Utah, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho and Dakota. The expedition when in the field is composed of about 40 persons, including scientists, packers, cooks and labourers.

The expedition is generally divided into several parties, each fully equipped and prepared to examine a specific area of country, usually about 10,000 square miles, more or less, depending upon the character of country to be examined. The field season usually lasts about four months, at the end of which time the parties all return to the starting point where the labourers are discharged and the scientists of the party return to Washington for office work. This survey has issued a series of annual reports, presenting in a popular manner the subjects treated upon, and which are designed for general distribution. A series of quarto volumes are also issued, embracing purely scientific matters. These are confined in their distribution to colleges, libraries and scientific specialists. A series of bulletins are also issued in which subjects requiring special and immediate attention may be found. There are in addition to what are called miscellaneous publications, such as meteorology, distances and altitudes, catalogues, &c. The importance and interest of the work of this organization has been fully commented upon in all parts of the civilized world; and as an illustration of the esteem and appreciation in which it is held abroad Lieutenant-General Richard Strachey, of the Royal Engineers of England, says in a communication to a man high in the science of this country that: "It is an undertaking in all respects most honourable to your Government and to the men of science who have been their agents in carrying it out. In truth it is, I believe, the only really scientific survey of a great country ever entered upon." The Survey has issued nine large publications within the past year and several important works are nearly ready to emerge from the Press.
