Judge Keogh's Insanity.

The Dublin Evening Telegraph contains the following sensational narrative:—"Dangerous insanity of Mr Justice Keogh. Desperate outrage on his valet. A painful sensation was created in the town to-day by the intelligence which arrived from Belgium that Mr Justice Keogh, who had been for some time in failing health, had developed alarming symptoms which culminated on Tuesday last in a sudden outbreak of violent madness, during which the learned judge attacked and inflicted desperate injuries with a razor upon his valet, Michael Cullen. Cullen is a native of Dublin, and has been for many years in the learned judge's employment in a quasi professional manner as well as a confidential capacity. A week or so ago Mr Justice Keogh started for the Continent for the benefit of his health. He was accompanied, as usual, by Cullen and by the judge's registrar, Mr Ferguson. They went to Brussels and put up at an hotel in a suburban hamlet, the judge and his valet occupying one apartment and Mr Ferguson another adjacent one. On Tuesday morning last, between four and five o'clock, Cullen was roused up by his master shouting, 'Cullen, Cullen, get up and get me some tea.' He arose, partially dressed himself, and proceeded to raise the window-blind, the room being dark. While in the act of doing so he suddenly found himself attacked from behind. Looking round, he found his assailant to be the judge himself, the wild glare of insanity burning in his eyes, and his countenance distorted by the senseless fury which had suddenly taken possession of him. He was dressed only in his nightshirt, and in his right hand he brandished an open razor. Shouting out, 'Now, I'll do for you,' the maniac sprang fiercely upon poor Cullen, and in a moment had buried the keen blade in his flesh, inflicting upon the unfortunate servitor two severe slashes across the ribs at either side of his body. 'Done for,' he most assuredly would have been, there is not the smallest reason to doubt, had not assistance come. The shouts of Cullen and the sounds of the struggle brought Mr Ferguson and people of the house into the apartment. They seized the excited judge and wrenched the dangerous weapon from his grasp. Medical assistance was promptly obtained, and Cullen's wounds, which were found to be of a dreadful nature, were immediately dressed. He is still however, in a very critical state. The judge has since been placed under proper restraint, and is expected to arrive shortly, we believe, in this country."

[Mr Justice Keogh is now confined. All hopes of recovery are abandoned.]

A PROPHECY FULFILLED.

The insanity of Mr Justice Keogh and his attempt to murder his registrar and servant recall an extraordinary speech made in 1852 by his uncle, Mr James Kelly, of Swinford, County Mayo, Ireland, which created some excitement at the time. Kelly was a man of great attainments and vast humour, but as mad as a March hare. He was fond of public speaking, his speeches being generally broad burlesques. In 1852, when Keogh,—who with John Sadlier had pledged himself in the most solemn manner not to accept office at the hands of any Ministry until certain measures, notably the Ecclesiastical Titles bill, were conceded—accepted the Solicitor-Generalship from the Aberdeen administration, meetings were held in Roscommon, his native county, and Mayo, at which condemnatory resolutions were passed. Kelly addressed a large meeting on the green at Castlebar, and spoke as follows:

Mr Chairman and Gentlemen: Who am I? What am I? What is my family? Who are the Kellys, of Swinford? Let me tell you briefly. Since the days of Cromwell—it is quite unnecessary in this assemblage to say bad luck to him—the Kelleys and Keoghs, of Roscommon, to whom they are unhappily related, have suffered every species of torture and confiscation at the hands of the British Government. The minions of Downing street have plied my family with every instrument of cruelty known to their accursed law. Through their craven vassals at the Castle we have been served time and again, aye, a hundred times in our history, with subpoenaduces tecums, with the villainous ne exeat regno, and even with the brutal capias ad satisfaciendum (exclamations of "Lord save us!"); until the big heart of the Kellys is all but broken. Gentlemen where are my ancestors? Standing here this night, I would not trust them; and I solemly declare in the presence of the dead, as it were, and mindful even to jealousy of their reputations, that the shores of Botany Bay and Spike Island are littered with their forgotten bones. My brother's nephew Dan Fitzerald—Lord rest his soul—you all know what became of him. On the perjured evidence of an informer, supported by a disgusting contempt for alibis on the part of Judge Lefroy, he was doomed to die for, as alleged, being concerned in the murder of a Scotch land agent. Gentlemen, I am proud to say he died like an Irishman only can die. The landlord, Mr Browne, of Castlemountgarratt, went to see him in the condemned cell in the jail beyond, and says he, "Danny, so they're going to hang you?" "I'm told so," said my brother's nephew. "Danny," said Mr Browne, I'll get up a petition for the commutation of your sentence and send it to the Castle." "Castle be d——d," cried Dan—he's dead, and I wouldn't belie him—"Castle be d——d," says he, "I'll be under no compliment to the British Crown!" And, gentlemen, he died like a patriot Irishman on the gallows tree. But I ask you to turn your eyes from that heart-stirring spectacle to the spectacle Ireland is now witnessing with horror. My own nephew is the principal in this case. He has, indeed, placed himself under a compliment to the Crown. [Here Kelly covered his face with his hands and sobbed for some minutes, the crowd uncovering.] Gentleman, I am in solemn, serious earnest now. It is a hard matter for a man to curse his own flesh and blood, and I want you to hear what crazy Kelly, of Swinford, has to say concerning his nephew, Solicitor-General Keogh: I curse him for all time. May he die like a dog without the sacraments. A curse be on him and his forevermore. May the grass wither under his feet and water boil in his polluted mouth. The curse of a betrayed people rest on him. May the plagues of heaven consume him, and all the torments of hell pursue him now and hereafter. Gentlemen, I am not a prophet, but I am the son—the mad son, if you will—of a prophetess. My poor old mother, now nearly a hundred years old, said to me yesterday: "James, mark my words. Lord Castlereagh cut his own throat. Keogh will cut somebody else's. He will die a madman with blood on his hands cursing and blaspheming the Church. He is a big man to-day and wears a silk gown, but he will spend his last days in a strait-jacket and his eternity in hell." That is what my mother says, and God send that it may be fulfilled!

Kelly died in a Dublin mad-house in 1857.
