CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.

The Obelisk Placed on the Thames Embankment.

London, Sept. 12.—The celebrated obelisk known as Cleopatra's Needle was successfully moved into an upright position at half-past three this afternoon. The work occupied half an hour. Vast crowds of spectators were present to witness the interesting sight, and the river was covered with steamers bearing burdens of humanity. There was not the slightest hitch in the undertaking. No ceremonial had been arranged for the occasion, but Mr Grantham, M.P., happening by accident to be present, was called upon to make a speech. The gentleman complied, and in the course of his remarks drew a contrast between the French obelisk, which had been brought over by the French Government by means of intricate machinery at a cost of £80,000, and the London monument, which had been transported by private enterprise at a cost of only £15,000. He paid a high compliment to Professor Erasmus Wilson's liberality, to Mr Dixon's engineering skill, and congratulated the country upon her new possession. Otherwise little enthusiasm was manifested. English and Turco-Egyptian flags were run up on flagstaffs lashed on each side of the needle to a height of fifteen feet above the ground.

STORY OF THE STONE.

Only forty two obelisks are known to exist. At Karnak four are standing and two are prostrate. Nine more are prostrate at Saan, one stands at Pilac, twelve are at Rome, the largest being at the Church of St. John Lateran. Florence contains two, and Constantinople, Paris, and Arles one each. In England there are five—namely, two at the British Museum, one at Alnwick Castle, the fourth at Kingston Lacy, Dorsetshire, brought there by William Banks, a friend of Lord Byron, and the fifth and most famous now standing on the Thames embankment. This latter obelisk was the companion of the one still standing at Alexandria, to which place it had been transported from On. Though named after Cleopatra, its erection at the temple of Cæsar did not occur until the eighth year of the reign of Augustus, and several years after the death of the Queen of Egypt. Abdul Lateel says that the obelisk stood in his time—the twelfth century.

The needle was offered to the Prince Regent by Mehemet Ali in 1819, and was accepted by the British Government. It could not be removed because of the expense. Subsequently, in 1851, its removal to England was advocated by Mr Joseph Hume, but Parliament declined to spend £35,000 in that way. It was then offered to the Crystal Palace Company, but declined with thanks. It was buried in the ground from 1852 to 1876, a Greek merchant on whose land it was declaring it an obstruction. It is eighty feet in height and about six feet square at the base. In 1877 Prof. Erasmus Wilson guaranteed to remove the obelisk to London at his own expense, and the contract was awarded to Mr John Dixon, $50,000 being the estimated cost. An iron cylinder was built around the monolith, and after several unsuccessful attempts it was launched.

The iron vessel containing the obelisk started from Alexandria in tow of the steamer Olga on September 21, 1877. The voyage progressed favourably until October 16, when a heavy gale was encountered in the Bay of Biscay, and the floating monolith was cut loose on October 17. The Olga then steamed direct for Falmouth, leaving the vessel to the mercy of the waves. It was sighted and picked up by the tug Fitzmaurice on the following day, and was towed into Ferrol, Spain. A legal contest of considerable interest then followed, resulting in an award of $10,000 salvage to the officers and crew of the Fitzmaurice. These troubles settled, the Cleopatra started in tow of a powerful Thames tug on January 15, 1878. The run of 700 miles was made in five days, the Cleopatra reaching Gravesend on the morning of the 20th. Thence she was towed up the river to the proposed site, opposite the Temple Gardens, on the Victoria Embankment.

COURTNEY AND HANLAN.

Some Speculation on the Result of the Race.

The following from the Boston Sunday Herald is the latest and most reliable information in regard to the great oarsmen: "Canadians evidently think well of Courtney, as they are betting in Montreal even up that he will win his race with Hanlan at Lachine. Courtney's boat had been rigged by a New England oarsman. The opinion is gaining ground that the great struggle between the two scullers will occur between the first 2½ miles, when, if Courtney should lead Hanlan on the turn, the Union Springs man will win, or, if he should row within himself and remain well up with and worry Hanlan, as in the race with Riley, Plaisted and Courtney at Saratoga, he will not be severely pushed to the winning post. On the other hand, it is claimed that Courtney has had no races at long distances while Hanlan has had several, and that Courtney claims that his distance is two or three miles. Courtney has expressed to the writer the conviction that if any man can beat him at two miles he can do it at ten, and he is of opinion that the rule applies to all other oarsmen. Charles B. Elliott has finished and sent to Hanlan and Courtney the boats ordered by them in anticipation of their race at Lachine. For Hanlan two boats have been built. Each will be given a thorough trial by the Canadian sculler, and the one suiting him the best will be used in the race. The first constructed is of the following dimensions: Length, 30 feet 8 inches; width, 10½ inches; depth amidships, 5½ inches; depth a stem, 3¾ inches; depth at stern, 2½ inches; weight, 30 pounds. The craft is of Spanish ceder, with trimmings of Hungarian ash. The second boat is not quite so long as the first, while it is ¾ of an inch wider, as will be seen by the following dimensions: Length, 30 ft.; width, 11¼ in,; depth amidships, 5½ in.; depth at stem, 3½ in.; depth at stern, 2½ in.; weight, about 28 pounds. This is of Spanish cedar throughout. Courtney's boat is of the subjoined dimensions: Length, 30 ft.; width, 11¾ in.; depth amidships, 5½ in.; depth at stem, 3¾ in., depth at stern, 2¼ in.; weight, 30 pounds. It is wholly of Spanish cedar."

A despatch from Sturgeon Point to the same paper, under date of September 13th says: Late last night even bets were made by Brister on Riley, with McManus on Hosmer, as to which would be better placed in the professional race here. McManus offered to back Hosmer to row Courtney a three-mile race at Silver Lake provided the Union Springs man would give him one minute and 20 seconds on that distance. Bristor declined this offer but expressed his willingness to back Courtney in a similiar match for $500 or $1000 a side, giving Hosmer one minute in three miles. It is quite possible that the parties will yet split the difference and make the match.

offered a $1000 even on Courtney against Hanlan, but the Canadians stood back for $1,000 against $750. A bet of $100 was finally made, but the friends of Hanlan here refused to do any more business at that rate.
