Queen's College Lectures—The last by Prof. Williamson.

There are two bits of intelligence in the news from Manitoba, which bear upon the politics of the late rebellion, and the action of our Provincial Legislature in offering a reward for the apprehension of the murder of Thomas Scott. The first item is that Riel has decamped from Fort Garry, and left the country to avoid the inevitable arrest and trial that would follow from the inducement of the reward. This was to be expected, and in default of a better result, we are disposed to look upon it as a good issue that the Dominion has got rid of the unwhipped ringleader in the Red River rebellion. The other item is contained in the proceedings of the Legislature of Manitoba. We find Attorney General Clarke of that province reported to say with reference to the offer of a reward by the Province of Ontario for the arrest of Riel, "that in his previous remarks he had purposely omitted to mention the name of Mr Blake, simply because he esteemed it a name too contemptible for utterance in the House. The disciples of Mr Blake came here from Ontario apparently thirsting for the blood of certain parties. He (Attorney General Clarke) would assure those fanatics that many of them might take a lesson of bravery from Louis Riel." We do not read that the Attorney General was called to order for this ebullition, neither do we find the laugh raised against him; but in Ontario Mr Clarke's pandering to the worst prejudices of a section will be appreciated as it deserves by serving to degrade him to a lower level in public estimation

Mr Speaker Denison of the House of Commons has displayed a fine sense of honour on the occasion of his retirement. He has received a mark of royal favour by being elevated to the peerage, but he has declined a pension. It has been customary for retiring Speakers to be awarded a handsome pension, but in a letter to Mr Gladstone, written some time before his retirement, Mr Denison declined the pension in the following terms which are exceedingly creditable and honourable. Said he:—"Though without any pretensions to wealth, I have a private fortune which will suffice, and for the few years of life that remain to me I should be happier in feeling that I am not a burden to my fellow-countrymen."

The fuller accounts that have come to hand respecting the assassination of Lord Mayo say that no political motive for the deed is discoverable. The act of the convict would appear to have sprung from a sudden motive suggested by the opportunity offered by the Governor General being present at the inspection of the convicts; and the assassin though a life prisoner, and we presume a murderer, was yet allowed to be at liberty within the precincts on account of good conduct. We see in this the danger of high officials visiting prisons and penitentiaries wherein the deepest-dyed criminals of a country are to be found. When Prince Arthur visited Canada and while in Kingston he was prudently counselled against visiting the Penitentiary, though the Governor General went through the entire institution, without an attempt being made to molest him. There must be always a danger, for high officials visiting such places where the criminals we may suppose brood over their deprivation of liberty, and when an opportunity offers strike in revenge against the typical authority that has consigned them to punishment for their crimes. The unhappy fate of the lamented Lord Mayo will not be without its warning in this respect.

Wesleyan Methodist Anniversary Services.

The first of the annual meetings was held yesterday in the Sydenham street Church, and was most gratifying in every respect. The announcement of the distinguished preacher who was to conduct the services was enough to secure a large attendance, but expectation was for once outdone by reality. Some of the expectant worshippers began to assemble at 9:15 a.m., although the services were not to commence until 10:30, and by the time the doors were opened at 9:30, a large crowd was outside waiting for admission. The continuous stream of eager and attentive people keep arriving until seats, aisles, halls, corridors, and even the pulpit steps were crammed, and many had to turn away without being able to find even standing room inside the sacred walls. There could not have been less than 1,500 people in attendance, and it is no exaggeration to say that not a religious persuasion in Kingston was without its proper quota of representatives. Presbyterian and Episcopalian, Baptist, and Congregationalist, Roman Catholic, and Lutheran for once forgot all differences, and sat spell-bound while the eloquent minister discoursed in their hearing the words of eternal life, one word justly is due to the members of the church, they freely gave up their pews, and afforded every opportunity for the host of visitors to enjoy the comfortable seats. Every exertion was used to provide accommodation, and benches, chairs, stools and even the altar was for once pressed into the service, we saw no visitor unprovided with a seat, but the venerable heads of the congregation were found either on improvised chairs, or occupying a modest stool. The wisdom of opening the church so early was soon apparent. The immense congregation was comfortably seated as far as possible by half past ten, and then the services were opened by the Rev. Mr Punshon giving out a hymn appropriate to the occasion. Prayer was then offered by the Rev. G. Sanderson, who also read the lesson for the day. The text was from Isiah iv. 2-5. "In that day shall the Branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel, &c., &c."

The reverend gentleman then spoke: There is a remarkable difference between the sentiments contained in this chapter and that which precedes it. In the former, no woes are too terrible, and the quick succession of them resembles the rattle of the thunder. But in the latter, the continuous stream of blessing is free and untroubled. As the sun shines out more balmy and pure after the storm has spent its power, so here the pure light of the blessings of God shine upon us after the terrible storm of His denunciation of woes. The horrors which spent themselves on the unrepentant sinners are here changed into the genial happiness which diffuses itself over the surviving remnant of the just. And we are to observe that this remnant is presented to us in a twofold character, as having happiness poured upon it not only as a family, but also as an assembly of families, and thus the blessing pronounced on Mount Zion is true of the church universal, and of every member of it. Mount Zion here represents the church. This mountain was originally crowned by a Jebusite fortress, which was captured by David, who transferred thither the Ark of the Covenant; and from being the dwelling place of the visible God, it has come to represent this invisible presence in the church through all time. The subject of my text, as it is, can only be presented to you under two aspects. 1st, preparation for the promise, and 2nd the promise itself. The preparation for the promise consists in two ways: by washing, and "purging by the spirit of judgment and by the spirit of burning." Our sins are washed away by the blood of the Lamb, but it may be that they are too deep for removal by washing, and then the other means of purification must be adopted. Fear not the fire then, which comes to us in various ways. It may sweep away our earthly possessions, but we have in heaven a possession which no loss in this earth can remove. You may be building a house, you watch its rising from tier to tier and you say: "I shall not remove," but the fire comes, and leaves not one stone upon another. And while you gaze upon your loss with tear-blinded eye, you look there, where stands the House of God eternal in the heavens. You may have stood in the darkened room and seen the life flickering in the form of some loved one, and at last die out, and yet even then the promise came: "He giveth his beloved rest. Fear not the fire then, come to it, it will only burn out the ulcer from the soul. Come to it! the refiner watcheth, watcheth, WATCHETH, and when the dross has been consumed from the earthly mould, when He has proved you enough, you will stand forth from your trial like burnished gold. You are now ready for the Promise. Its meaning here is illustrated by that old story of the Israelitish escape from Egypt. The pillar of cloud shielded them from the pursuing host, and the pillar of fire, which was light for them, was a consuming fire to the enemy. Oh! it is a wonrous tale, that escape from bondage. For forty years that cloud attended the chosen people. For forty years they were led by it. No man knew when the tents were pitched, when they were again to be struck. The matin hymn was sung, but no man knew where the vesper song would resound. For forty years no blade of golden wheat bent to the sickle; for forty years that immense host of six hundred thousand fighting men, besides women and children, ate the heavenly manna; for forty years no river gladdened the eye, but "their water was sure," for they drank of the living water that welled from Horeb. No Elam of palms might be near, yet the hand of God protected them, and His Almighty power overshadowed them. And thus they saw and felt His visible power. They might be encamped in the valley, and high above the false prophet might listen to the voice of the tempter: "Curse me, Jacob." Even a higher eminence might be chosen, and again the words be uttered: "Curse me, Jacob," but the voice of Baalam could only be heard in blessing. And as the cloud thus overshawdowed and protected Israel of old, so the visible presence of God and His protecting power is seen in every age of the church. The crown of Cæsar, the tetrachal power of Herod, the judgment seat of Pilate could not prevail against a few rude fishermen and tentmakers who preached only the cross of Christ. The altar and the throne gave up the hopeless contest and acknowledged at last: Thou hast conquered, O Galilean! And while this is true of the church in general, it is far truer in the experience of individual Christians. The humble cottage may present no outward sign, the winds of heaven may visit it too roughly, and yet from that humble cot, the pillar of cloud unseen by us may rise to the highest heaven. There was a man in the olden time, whose flocks and herds increased, whose fields were visited by no showers and bathed by no dews which did not equally fall on his his neighbours, and yet his lands multiplied, and his crops gave increases. And why? Because the ark of the covenant of God rested in the house of Obed-Edom. Let us then toil on. The mountains may overshadow the narrow way, the rocks may threaten to fall and bury us, and yet when we have passed through we look back and see that those mountains and those rocks were a protection from greater ills. We may encounter on our narrow way a cloud which lowers in our path, which can not be avoided, and like Niobe in tears we enter its gloomy embrace, but, behold! the cloud lifts, and we find ourselves in meadows bespent with flowers, and the mild sun of heaven shining upon us with the Father's glory. And how does the lesson apply to us? Simply thus. We enjoy the light of gospel truth; let us not deny it to others, but may the glory of Mount Zion be to them as it has been to us.

We have thus tried to call a few flowers from this admirable discourse, but our effort is as vain and as little calculated to give an idea of a sermon replete with every grace of diction and elocution, as was the idea of him in the old story, who having a house for sale, carried about with him a brick. We have tried to show some of the sparkling gems which adorned this splendid effort, an effort which held the vast audience as under a spell for the space of three-quarters of an hour.

The children enjoyed their treat in the afternoon, and in the evening another large audience was present to listen with pleasure to the excellent discourse of the Rev. J. A Williams, of Brockville who delivered a very learned and able sermon on Acts viii. 35. This evening the missionary service will commence 7 o'clock, and addresses are expected from the reverend gentlemen who preached yesterday, and from others both lay and clerical.

The News never pretended to have any railroad stock; and as for telegraph stock, it would possess little value while the Whig was around.

"A Catholics" letter (the last), and lines addressed to to "E. H," will appear to-morrow

Kingston Industries—No. 6.

REYNER AND CO'S ORGAN FACTORY.

This establishment, the only one of the kind between Toronto and Quebec, we find to be in a most prosperous condition. On the 1st of January, 1871, a little over a year ago, the members of the firm, Messrs Joseph Reyner and Charles Mee, formed a co-partnership and commenced business under the above title, and since that date the advancement made, amidst difficulties which invariably beset new institutions, has been such as to exceed the anticipations so sanguinely entertained by its projectors. The factory was in operation but a brief period when the proprietors found that in order to facilitate and complete the orders for instruments flowing in upon them, that the place then occupied by them—the stone building at the corner of Princess and King streets—was much too small for the requirements, and that it was imperatively necessary for them to remove at the earliest convenience to more commodious premises. A suitable building was not obtainable, and it was decided to erect one, which they did on Gore near Wellington Street, and constructed from their own devised plans and specifications, it answers the purpose for which it was intended satisfactorily. To this building, 40 feet wide, by 80 feet long, four storeys high, the factory was removed on the first July following, but even now additional accommodation is in prospect. On the east end of the first floor is situated the wareroom where the instruments are put on exhibition, prior to packing and delivery to the purchaser. To the right of this is located the finishing and tuning department; on the second flat (in one capacious apartment) the case making, etc., is carried on, while the third storey is used for polishing and varnishing. The basement contains the expensive qualities of lumber, lathes, and the requisite machinery for sawing fret work. At the last Provincial Exhibition here, Messrs Reyner & Co. entered their instruments, and though the competition was close, and against some of the best manufacturers, two prizes were awarded them, thus affording ample evidence of their excellency and superiority. No more convincing proof could be brought to bear in commending them to the consideration of the musical public. Gradually the instruments have gained a favourable reputation, and during the latter part of the past year many were disposed of between Montreal on the east, and Sarnia on the west, giving satisfaction everywhere. About three instruments are manufactured weekly. Fifteen men are constantly employed, but the firm expects to increase the staff shortly. The style and finish of the instruments—the piccolo organ especially—is incomparable to anything of the same description in the Upper and Lower Provinces; the expensive polish (unstained) of the rosewood being equal to the first-class pianoes. The improvements, too, add materially to their value. Melodeons are made as high in price as $250, and organs as high as $1,000 of any design wished by the buyer. Mr Reyner and Mr Mee are both artizans of long experience, and, personally overseeing the work, its quality can be guaranteed. Messrs Reyner and Co. are certainly displaying a spirit of enterprise worthy of notice. We trust that they will continue to prosper.

Professor Williamson's lecture, which was postponed for the Bible Society meeting on the 16th of January, will take place at Convocation Hall to-morrow evening. The subject will be "On Aeriform Bodies, and especially the nature and properties of atmospheric air." The lecture will be accompanied by a series of experimental illustrations. This will be the last of the popular course of Tuesday evening lectures for the present session.

The News brags because it got one telegram of five lines, which we did not publish.—Whig.

The fact of the Whig not receiving so important a cable telegram as that referring to the attempted assassination of the Queen, shows conclusively that it does not receive the afternoon cable telegrams, except when they are sent from Montreal or Toronto, after being published in the papers there. Concerning the length of the telegram, we may say that "five lines" of such important news is of infinitely more importance, than half a column detailing the burning of a barn at Gananoque or Dunaghy—quality not quantity again. "That's the idea!"

Oh!!!—At an oyster supper held in Toron. to a few evenings ago at which Mr William Robinson was present, a fancy sketch of which we find in our unscrupulous contemporary, copied from the Globe:

Mr H. Reynolds read a telegram he had just received from Mr Livingston, of Kingston, which stated that the Board of Trade of that city had held a meeting, and had passed a vote of thanks to Mr Robinson for his course in Parliament.

A Pleasing Incident.—At the meeting of Wesleyan Methodist Sunday Schools on Sunday afternoon, on which occasion Rev. W. M. Punshon addressed the children, Rev. G. R. Sanderson stated that he had met Professor Mowat on his way to the church, who desired that the the teachers and children of St. Andrew's school might unite with them in order that they might have the opportunity of hearing the distinguished President of the Conference. The hour was so late, however, it was found that the children of the latter school could not be got together in time. This Mr Sanderson very much regretted, as had it been known sooner that Mr Punshon would speak and that Professor Mowat desired St. Andrew's School should be present, arrangements would have been made to accommodate them. He was rejoiced to find such good feeling existing between the two churches.

Police Court, Saturday.—(Mr Strange, P. M., presiding.)—John Downey, was charged with drunkenness and disorderly conduct. He had just served a term of two year's in the Kingston Penitentiary, from which he was liberated the previous day, but no sooner did he find himself a free man than he fell a victim to intemperance, and lost the greater portion of the money he received from the prison authorities, to convey him to his friends. Dismissed with a caution. Alexander Robinson, was accused of drunkenness and assault. It seems that when taken into custody, and was being escorted to the cells, he acted in a boisterous manner, and on reaching opposite the station, P. C. Wooton, tripped and fell on the sidewalk with his prisoner, breaking the constable's collar bone. He denied the charge, and was remanded until Wooton could appear and prosecute. In the afternoon Robinson admitted the offence, and was fined $10 and costs, or 60 days in gaol. Paid.

Readings.—Mr W. E. Eastty, of Montreal, is announced to give two Literary Entertainments, in the Victoria Music Hall, on Wednesday and Thursday evenings next. Mr Eastty has long been known in the Commercial Metropolis, as one of its most finished elocutionists, and that he is equally at home in "grave or gay—lively or severe,"—we have said enough to commend him to the good offices of all who seek to encourage entertainments of this nature, in contradistinction to the trashy performances of niggers and mountebanks, who seem on all occasions, to command popular approval, to the no small detriment of the rising generation. The Montreal papers speak highly of Mr Eastty, and we, who have heard him more than once, can testify that, with the programme before us, he will afford an immense treat. To hear Mrs Caudle's Lecture on Freemasonry (which reminds us that Mr Eastty is, himself, a Mason, which may account for the vim he throws int it) is alone worth the charge for admission. We hope and believe, therefore, that his entertainments in Kingston will be well patronized.

To the Editor.—Dear Sir,—In looking over an article in the Daily News of the 1st inst., giving an account of the dedication of the Masonic Hall of Albion Lodge, at Harrowsmith, I observed a slight error. You say that "the Brethren sat down to a splendid dinner at the Union Hotel," which should read Albion Hotel, kept by Mr John Switzer.—A Mason Present.

Brevities.—The Board of Health met in the Council Chamber this afternoon.

The Police Commissioners held a meeting this morning, and examined the license applications.

The shareholders of the Gas Works assembled this afternoon, and elected directors for the ensuing year.
