FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 5.

UNCLE SAM "DOING" THE DOMINION.

Montreal, Canada, June 28.—About the 6th of July commences the annual influx into Canada of American visitors, continuing, with the warm weather, until early in September. During these two months from sixty thousand to eighty thousand Americans visit the Dominion, attracted by various reasons. The scenery is fine, for one thing; the sea bathing on the Lower St. Lawrence is excellent, for another; the manners and customs of the French inhabitants give one a fair idea of France without crossing the Atlantic, for a third. Then, the trip is a comparatively fresh and inexpensive one, as compared with Niagara or Saratoga, although of late hotel prices have advanced to a very fair imitation of American watering place tariffs. Lastly, and this is not one of the least of charms to fashionable females, fascinated by fraud, or the opportunity of perpetrating it on the government. Canada is popularly believed to be a nice place wherein to purchase cheaply silks and laces, which are afterwards to be smuggled into the realms of Uncle Sam, costing ever so much less than they would if regularly imported or bought at a store on Broadway. The publication of Mr Howell's charming series of sketches in the Atlantic Monthly, entitled "Their Wedding Journey," is expected largely to procure travel horewards this year. The fiat has gone forth in the fashionable papers that the White Mountains and Canada are de rigueur. The peninsula of Western Canada demands no stay on the part of the sightseer. It is fertile and closely settled, but the people and the prospect are American. Travellers from the west may either take the Grand Trunk propellers from Chicago or Milwaukee to Sarnia—a pleasant trip—or the Michigan Central, or Southern Railroad to Detroit, or run up to Buffalo, entering Ontario by way of Detroit they have a choice of routes—crossing to Windsor and thence, via Hamilton, on the Great Western Railroad, or via Sarnia, on the Grand Trunk, a distance of about two hundred and thirty miles. Both lines are good and run palace cars, my choice being the Grand Trunk, on which baggage is examined and breakfast eaten at Sarnia at a more convenient hour of the morning than at the Detroit-Windsor ferry. Leaving Chicago at night you arrive at Toronto early next afternoon. Invalids will find famous mineral waters at London and St. Catherine's. Should the traveller enter the Dominion by way of Buffalo he may take a train on the Great Western road to Toronto or cross the lake by steamer. In fine weather the latter is a beautiful voyage. A stay of five or six hours in Toronto is sufficient till the evening boat or train leaves. The new government house and the University Building are about the only sights. The Queen's and American are the prominent hotels, the former being the most patronized of Americans. Leaving Toronto in the evening by Grand Trunk Railroad, or in the afternoon by the Royal Mail line, we go down Lake Ontario. If one has leisure on his hands he may spend a day at Kingston rather profitably, examining the Penitentiary—one of the finest in the country,—and the fortifications. Early on the morning after leaving Toronto the beautiful scenery of the Thousand Islands is passed through. In the course of the day the steamer (which has now left the lakes and is fairly in the St. Lawrence) passed down the famous rapids which impede navigation between Brockville and Montreal—last of all running the Lachine Rapids by far the grandest of the series. The exciting features which this voyage presents have often been descanted upon, but never done full justice to. The boiling torrents of waters, lashed into white foam, which fall away all around like masks to disclose black rocks, jagged and threatening, or worn into boulders of fantastic shape by the waves, adown which the steamer rides at lightning speed, threatened at every moment with destruction, yet always escaping injury, form a tout ensemble of thrilling interest which words are inadequate to express. The steamer arrives near sunset at Montreal (Mont Royal), the Royal City, the commercial metropolis of Canada. The most fashionable hotels at Montreal are American headquarters. Prices for the season run about $5 to $3 currency. To do Montreal fairly one should arrive on a Saturday morning. The afternoon should be devoted to climbing the spire of the French Cathedral, so-called, because it is only the parish church, which has, by the way, one of the biggest, if not the very biggest bell in America. From the spire the view is grand in the extreme. A glance at one of the convents, with a little shopping will fill up the afternoon. If a lacrosse match, in which the Indians and white men are competing, be afoot, go and see it. In the evening a tour through Bonsecour's market, with a glance at the old church adjoining it, will furnish ample employment and enjoyment. Sunday morning may be spent at one's own church—the Cathedral for Episcopalians, St. John's for High Churchmen, St. Andrew's for Presbyterians, St. James' for the Methodists, or the parish church for the Catholics. In the afternoon by all means ride round the mountain, a distance of about seven miles, pausing at the turnpike gate to see one of the finest views in America—the town below, all green trees and silver roofs; the blue river beyond, spanned by the great brown Victoria bridge and studded with "emerald islands;" while still further away stretches what Home calls "a lovely confusion," of campaign, bounded by the mountains of Vermont. Before you ride through Sherbrooke and St. Catherine streets on your return. In the evening attend English service at the great Catholic church of the Gesu, modelled after that in Rome. The next morning may be devoted to a stroll through the streets in the vicinity of the hotel, on every one of which will be found buildings and blocks whose massiveness and beauty of architecture deserve mention. The Montrealer never speculates. If he makes or inherits money it all goes into land and buildings. For the afternoon there is the inevitable Victoria Bridge, Museums, public libraries, educational institutes and parks; Montreal in these is more poorly fitted than an American city of 50,000 inhabitants. If you have time to spare take the night train via Prescott (breakfast at Daniells') and arrive at Ottawa City, the capital of the Dominion, about half-past ten o'clock a.m. The lions at Ottawa are the parliamentary and departmental buildings, immense piles of bizarre architecture, and the Chaudiere Falls, (so called from the cloud of steam which hangs
