ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION.

The attempt on the life of President McKinley is inexplicable. He represents, in his person and government, the freedom which is sometimes abused, as it certainly was in this instance.

Nieman, the Pole, and probably an anarchist, has no personal grievance against the president. The chief of the United States government is a man of amiable temperament and a cosmopolitan, giving the hand of friendship and of welcome to every man who desires a home in America. It was a cruel act to accept that hand in kindness and at the same time discharge the weapon that, but for the interposition of Providence, would have sacrificed a life.

The medical men pronounce the president out of danger. He will probably live to serve his nation, his day and generation, to the end of his alloted time, but he will never forget the hour when, in a centre of light, on a glad and joyous occasion, on the day dedicated to his honor at the Pan-American exposition, he narrowly escaped being the victim of a murderer.

Nieman, like so many of his kind, will go to his account, an unreasoning mortal, the type of those who are becoming more numerous the denser becomes the population, and the more desperate the conditions of life. The world may be wrong in some of its aspects, but the wrongs will not be righted by the stilleto and the revolver in the hands of irresponsible men.

GROUND FOR KICKING.

The Ottawa Free Press has had occasion to speak candidly of a matter in which the government is concerned, thus:

"The financial policy of the government in connection with the unfortunate census enumerations is not to be commended. The pay allotted them has been very small, and as the work is temporary, the game being played seems scarcely worth the candle. It is to be regretted that in too many instances since its accession to power the government has exhibited a tendency to be penny wise. No good purpose is served thereby, and for the sake of a few paltry dollars there has been much heartburning provoked and alienation of friends. Heavy expenditures in other directions afford no solace for those who feel themselves aggrieved. This was especially in evidence immediately after the government took office. It is to be regretted if the policy, conceived doubtless with the best intentions, and designed in the public interest, should be perpetuated. Its weakness and undesirableness has already been sufficiently proved."

The Free Press is a supporter of the government's general policy. Like a true liberal paper, however, it is persuaded that a little plain speaking is necessary at times. It does not do the government any harm to be told of its blunders, and the census business has been a blunder, so far at least as the payment of the enumerators is concerned. The Whig has already put itself on record upon this matter. The wage should have been determined before the work was begun and it should have been promptly paid as soon as the books were returned. The delay and the uncertainty have been attended with a growing dissatisfaction, and the decision has been followed by a pretty emphatic protest.

ADVICE OF A BISHOP.

Bishop Potter, of New York, who is the president of the local board of conciliation, declares that capital and labour will always come into conflict while they are as far apart and as much out of harmony with each other as at present. Arbitration, even when acceptable, which it is not sometimes, is the resort when a difficulty has arisen. But the good bishop says this difficulty would not occur were employers and employees better informed of each other's position. He complains that both sides are too secretive about their affairs.

The employer is engrossed with his own plans, and may find them burdensome enough, more burdensome than they would be if his men knew more about them. He may be coining money and he may not. It is the ignorance of the employees in regard to the fact that makes them act independently, and perhaps indiscreetly.

Then the employee has his anxieties, his moments of deep depression, his periods when the wage he earns seems wholly inadequate for his needs, and he keeps his experience to himself. He may tell his co-workers of it, but as between him and his employer there is no thought or suggestion of confidence.

Thus the relations of capital and labor must be changed, in the opinion of the bishop, before there can be an end of strikes and the misery they entail. The one must know more about the other, and there must be a mutual burden bearing, ere the ideal life is reached and maintained.

WHITNEY'S RIGHT-ABOUT-FACE.

At the Toronto convention the one act which betokened Mr. Whitney's change of plans was his announcement in regard to Mr. Clergue. When that gentleman projected the Algoma Central railway, as a means of developing the mineral resources of New Ontario, Mr. Whitney objected. The measure was pressed. It involved the granting of substantial encouragement from the Ontario government, and Mr. Whitney denounced it in the legislature. "It is," said he, "the most phenomenal steal, the greatest attempt at public robbery, the most heinous public crime that was ever attempted by public men in authority, and I don't think it would be an exaggeration to say on the continent of North America."

That represented a tactical mistake. It was rash and thoughtless talk. Mr. Whitney saw it. So when, in the following session, the Algoma Central railway was proposed, on less favorable conditions so far as the province was concerned, he made the flop and said "the road was a most desirable one," as any one could see who was familiar with the geography of the country!

Now Mr. Whitney goes further and tells the brethren that he has known Mr. Clergue longer than any member of the government, that this Mr. Clergue is a fine man, and that he deserves all praise for his efforts to develop New Ontario. He did not know what Mr. Clergue thought about the ministers, but he had a strong suspicion that he did not find any wings sprouting from their shoulders.

Assuredly not, and Mr. Clergue would not find that anyone among them had the cloven foot. It is a little late in the day for Mr. Whitney to pose as Mr. Clergue's patron saint.

IS THE CANAL WANTED?

The Ottawa Journal discusses the question of private vs. government ownership so far as the Georgian Bay canal is concerned. It prefers private management at the start for national and political reasons. The work on the canal would cost less; it would be carried on with greater expedition; it would be conducted by competent men, appointed on their merits; it would, when finished, be the better in the hands of those who would use it for what it was worth, as a business enterprise, free of political entanglements.

The canal could, of course, be constructed under the direction of government experts; the government could guarantee the interest on the money with which it was built, this interest to be a first lien upon the earnings; and the government could acquire the property afterwards, if necessary, by purchase and arbitration. An issue of first moment is whether the canal is a necessity, and what effect its construction will have upon the canal system now in use and representing many millions of dollars.

Hon. Mr. Tarte has spent some of his summer vacation—presuming that any of his outings can be called or considered a vacation—in going over the proposed route of the Georgian Bay canal, and he is reported to be very much in favour of it—as a government work. He is a man of ability, and he can, if he wills, use his enthusiasm for any public scheme to very great advantage. But he will not propose something as a finality of which he knows so little as there is known so far of the feasibility and cost of the proposed canal. A lot has to be done before parliament can be invited to discuss the canal. Will it be to the advantage of the country? Will it warrant, as a national highway, the enormous outlay it must involve? What about the other great undertakings which are projected on the theory that the chain of lakes, the connecting canals, and the St. Lawrence, above as well as below Montreal, constitute the natural water way and artery of trade between the interior of Canada and the ocean? Are the permanent works at Port Colborne to go on? Are the improvements of the present route, some of them hardly yet complete, and adding so much to the capital account and public debt of Canada, to be imperilled in the adoption of a new and competitive route?

For the time being it is not a matter of who will run or operate the Georgian Bay canal, but does the country need it?

Organist Resigns.

Newburgh, Sept. 5.—Mr. Denyes has moved into the house recently vacated by Mr. Carscallen. and J. Paul will soon occupy Miss Price's beautiful residence. The streets of the village are again adorned with the faces of high school pupils, who have returned from various parts of the country for another year's work. The family of C. W. Glenn intend leaving for their new home near Cornwall next week. We are sorry to learn that Miss Cairns, organist of the Methodist church has resigned. Miss Lena Madden has returned from a week's visit with friends in Smith's Falls. Mrs. Henry Paul is spending this week with Mrs. Martin at Cannington.

MERIT REWARDED.

Smith-Dorrien Made Permanent Major-General.

Canadians who served in South Africa will be glad to learn of the promotion granted to Maj.-Gen. H. L. Smith-Dorrien, of whose brigade they formed a part. Gen. Smith-Dorrien went out to South Africa two years ago as lieutenant-colonel, commanding a battalion of the Derbyshires. He did such excellent service throughout the campaign that he not only gained the D.S.O., but has recently had his local rank of major-general made substantive. Gen. Smith-Dorrien was exceedingly popular with the Canadian contingent, and they one and all will heartily endorse the following passage from a letter which appeared in a recent number of the Army and Navy Gazette. The extract reads:

"I cannot tell you in words how delighted all ranks were when the news reached us that our late dear, good 'chief' Smith-Dorrien had been chosen to receive promotion as major-general. If ever recognition was deserved it has been in this case. . . Officers and men do not only respect him; they love him for his sterling qualities. A more unselfish and truer-hearted man never put on his majesty's uniform, which is saying much. His creed in life is that we are all here to do as much good as possible for those associated with us. . . And he lives up to his creed, too."

There is much more, but enough has been quoted. Smith-Dorrien is already a household word in many Canadian homes, and hundreds of Canadians, many of whom never saw him, will watch his future career with interest.

INVADE DUTCH LEGATION.

Force Their Way In To Capture a Fugitive.

London, Sept. 7.—Despatches from Constantinople allege that Turkish officials on Sept. 1st, forced an entrance into the garden of the Dutch legation and captured a fugitive whom they were pursuing. The officials wounded the gate keeper.

Diplomatic circles are indignant at the disregard of the inviolability of what, according to the capitulations, is foreign territory. The Dutch are demanding satisfaction.

Holleford Happenings.

Holleford, Sept. 6.— Business is booming. H. Clow has sold his farm here to D. Walker, Glendower, and J. W. Redmond, of this place, while he has purchased the farm of E. Dole, Hartington. James Walker purchased the farm known as the Dunn property. James Babcock has moved his saw mill back to the farm; it will be missed in the village as it caused quite a stir. A new arrival at John Carslake's: a girl. Mrs. Collins is recovering from typhoid fever under the the treatment of Dr. Genge. R. McKeever and family started to-day for St. Lawrence Corners, N.Y., where they will take up residence. J. W. Redmond lost a valuable cow yesterday. Miss Edna Walker, has returned from a three weeks' visit in Kingston. Dr. Genge has gone to Parham to practice. A number from here attended the picnic at Desert Lake last Thursday. Mrs. M. Trousdale left for Illinois on Tuesday to spend a few weeks with friends. A committee met at the church last evening to organize a choir. Visitors: Mrs. Antoine, Mrs. McNalty, Ottawa, at J. O'Rielly's; Miss Ethel De Wolfe, Westport, at J. W. Redmond's; J. McKeever, Watertown, at R. McKeever's; E. Genge has returned to New York.

WEDDED AT CATARAQUI.

Miss Gertrude Burnett Becomes Mrs. W. M. Clark.

A very pleasing event took place Wednesday evening, 4th inst., at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Angus Burnett, Cataraqui, when their youngest daughter, Gertrude V., was united in marriage to Walter M. Clark, Wilton. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Craig, Cataraqui, under an arch of evergreens on the lawn. In the centre of the arch a bell of evergreen was placed, The charming bride was attired in a dress of white organdie, trimmed with chiffon, and baby ribbon, appliqued with cream lace. Her bridal veil was caught beneath a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses, and was given away by her brother, John, of Havelock. Miss Nellie Graham, Kingston, acted as bridesmaid, and looked very pretty in a costume similar to that worn by the bride. She carried pink carnations. R. Stevenson, Violet, ably supported the groom.

As the bridal party took their places, Mendelssohn's wedding march was rendered by Miss Emma Ward. After the nuptial knot was tied, and congratulations extended a very elaborate supper was served. The tables were tastefully spread on the lawn, which was prettily lighted by Chinese lanterns and torches. About seventy-five guests were present including friends from Montreal, Toronto, Newark, N.J., New York and Morristown.

The presents proved a magnificent collection, and comprised useful and beautiful mementoes from friends and relatives, including pieces of silver, china, cut glass, and several pieces of furniture, a cheque from her brother John, also one from her brother Will, and one from an uncle in Watertown, N.Y. The groom's present to the bride was a crescent pin, and to the bridesmaid, a pearl ring.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark left Kingston on the ten o'clock train en route for Toronto, Niagara and Buffalo, amid a shower of rice. Her going away dress was blue ladies' cloth. Under the short coat she wore an old rose taffeta silk blouse with hat to match. The many freinds extend hearty congratulations, and sincere wishes for a bon voyage through life.

Dreaming Of Home.

Eugene Field.

It comes to me often in silence
When the firelight sputters low—
When the black, uncertain shadows
Seem wraiths of long ago;
Always with a throb of heartache,
That thrills each pulsive vein,
Comes the old, unquiet longing
For the peace at home again.

I'm sick of the roar of cities,
And of faces old and strange;
I know where there's warmth and welcome,
And my yearning fancies range
Back to the dear old homestead,
With an aching sense of pain;
But there'll be joy in the coming,
When I go home again.

When I go home again! There's music
That never may die away,
And it seems the hands of angels,
On a mystic harp at play,
Have touched with a yearning sadness,
On a beautiful broken strain,
To which is my fond heart wording,
"When I go home again."

Outside of my darkened window
Is the great world's crash and din,
And slowly the autumn shadows
Come drifting, drifting in;
Sobbing the night wind murmurs
To the splash of the autumn rain: —
But I dream of the glorious greeting
When I go home again!

Dyspepsia, Indigestion.

When a patient says, "My food does not agree with me; it sours on my stomach, and my appetite is treacherous. I suffer great distress after eating certain kinds of food, for which I have a great liking. I have to be careful as to what I eat," it is Dyspepsia, and the least of the suffering is upon the stomach, the origin of the trouble, for this condition produces the most disagreeable train of symptoms in its aggravated form. The stomach is in active sympathy with the brain and nervous system, and Dyspepsia produces nervous prostration, gloomy forebodeings, nightmare, depression of spirits, sexual exhaustion, sleeplessness, as well as many other indications of a breaking down of the general vital forces, all in sympathy with the stomach.

Electricity, properly applied, will cure it. It begins from weakness, from a lack of vital activity in the secretory glands of the stomach from a want of sufficient gastric juice; hence, a remedy which will arouse these parts, stimulate them into action, infuse them with vitality, will cure the cause and the disease. Our treatment will do it. The study of years has taught us that the stomach is, in health, a veritable galvanic battery. It generates electricity, which is heat, warmth. When it breaks down it carries every other vital organ with it. Dyspepsia comes when its capacity has been over-taxed; it is not able to furnish the energy needed. Hence, a steady, gradual infusion of electric force into it renews its power, arouses its inactive function, revives the secretive action and restores the machinery to a healthy state. The stomach begins anew to throw out sparks of electric life to the whole vital system, and a state of perfect health is restored.

People Who Suffer.

From Dyspepsia in any form, or from Weak Nerves, or General Debility, or from those troubles brought on by abuse and excess will find my new and scientific treatment a speedy and permanent cure.

A Complete Cure Or No Charge.

If you are weak and feel that you ought to consult a doctor, write me how you feel, and I will cure you as soon as possible. I make no charge whatsoever till a complete cure is effected, then my charge will be only one-fourth of that of the general physician. In each case I undertake I send a legal guarantee positively to cure or to make no charge at all. Of course I do not say that I can cure with a certainty every case, but I do say and legally bind myself to it, either to cure you or not charge you anything. I think this is the fairest proposition any physician can offer, then I ask no pay till that cure is completed in every detail.

I Send Free

To each person writing me, a beautifully illustrated Medical Treatise entitled "Electro-Therapeutics." This valuable and instructive edition can be had for the asking and will be sent you at once, charges prepaid. It is never well to delay in a matter of health. Let me hear from you. Do not delay.
