NEW YORK'S HORSE SHOW

SALE OF BOXES ALREADY AMOUNTS TO $30,000.

Annual Banquet of the Chamber of Commerce—The Supply of Servants Inadequate—Republicans Will Work Harder.

New York, Nov. 15.—On Monday the horse show opens, and the social season in Gotham begins in earnest. During the past few years, and even during the past twelve months, several very prominent and wealthy families from other cities have pitched their tents along ultra-fashionable Fifth avenue, and have evidently come to stay. With these there also come into greater prominence several New Yorkers who have not done much entertaining in a number of years. The horse show, therefore, will have more of a variety in the audience, which is more than half the show, however attractive the horses may be, and there will be some new faces in the boxes and new names on the list. There was a sharp competition for boxes and the receipts from the sale exceeded the total of last year by $5,000, the entire amount being $30,000. The highest prices for boxes were paid by Thomas W. Lawson, the Boston millionaire, who bid $535 for a compartment, while K. C. Billings, of Chicago, and George J. Bascom secured choice places at $650 each.

Mrs. Hetty Green is not only the richest and most economical woman in America, but she is a great advocate of that particular quality or characteristic or whatever it may be called, that has been the means of her gaining such a vast fortune—economy. Never does she let an opportunity pass to impress the importance of saving upon those with whom she comes in contact. A few days ago a man living in one of the suburban districts wrote to Mrs. Green and told her that he had just christened his first little daughter Hetty Green B—. Mrs. Green replied by sending a toy savings bank to her namesake.

An important social event among financiers scheduled for next week is the annual banquet of the chamber of commerce, which will partake of the nature of a celebration of the victory for municipal reform in the recent election. Seth Low, the mayor-elect, who is an honorary member of the chamber, is expected to be present and there will be general jubilation over the defeat of Tammany, which in more ways than one the chamber contributed in no small measure.

Among the crowds that loiter every day along the rapid transit tunnel excavations and ask foolish questions of the workmen and inspectors, the most frequent inquiry relates to what are called supply ducts. "Are they pipe galleries?" queries the man who who has either forgotten or has not heard that the exponents of pipe galleries haven't won their fight in the legislature as yet. In reality, the supply ducts could not possibly be pipe galleries, for they are much too small. They are little terra cotta conduits arranged along the side of the tunnel against the outermost wall. In some places there are only four or five of them, in other as many as twenty or more, the number depending on the needs of each particular place. In them will be the wires that furnish power for the trains, the lights of stations and the artificial lighting of the main body of the tunnel.

The musical season in New York will go forward in its customary busy manner. The Boston symphony concerts will be as numerous as heretofore, and the entertainments of other musical individuals and companies will be watched with interest. Greater New York usually enjoys about 100 orchestral concerts in the course of a musical season, and it is enough for a provincial city like this.

The beaded bags and purses which have steadily been gaining in favor during the last few years, have this fall attained the proportions of a rad. They are more beautiful and elaborate then ever and the amount of work put into them renders even the simplest of them expensive. The more elaborate patterns in combination with costly gems represent appalling figures in their prices.

The republican spell-binder, the Hon. Jacob Kempler, late of West Virginia, and of the United States custom service, constantly entertains statesmen about him with reminiscences of men and things which, his friends admit, he would be reluctant to accompany with affidavits. Superintendent Jones, of the New York Acquariam, who is blessed with an equally bounteous store of reminiscences often swaps tales with Mr. Kempler. The two had been doing this the other evening and at last the veracious West Virginian, well pleased, said:

"I say, colonel, you and I could tour this country and tell lies that would be of constant amazement to our audiences, couldn't we?"

"Yes, I think we could," replied Col. Jones, "and I wouldn't have to say a word either."

Women who returned to New York this fall and tried to engage servants quickly, found themselves in trouble. "It's a good thing that I've been accumulating strength all summer," said one of them on her eighth visit to the employment agency, "otherwise I should never have been equal to the ordeal of getting started again. This year it is harder than it ever was before to get servants."

This woman voiced the complaint of many. Never has lamentation been more general and never before has the supply of servants seemed more inadequate.

So many important elections are included in the political calendar for the next few years that the leaders of the republican county committee have decided to increase their permanent office force and work harder between campaigns than hitherto. Next year there will be a state election; in 1903 there will be another municipal election; in 1904 there will be a national campaign, and unless the laws are changed, there will be an important political contest in New York state every year from now on. The members of the organization at its regular November meeting which will be held next Thursday, will be asked to consider the advisability of making a number of changes in the system of party management.

Britain's King And Queen.

King Edward does not rise as early in the morning as his lamented mother. The social customs of the day keep him up till a comparatively late hour, and he is therefore compelled, by the mere necessity of physical health, to remain in his bed chamber till eight o'clock in the morning.

No man in the land can show such a record of work done as does the time sheet of Britain's king, who, with the queen, is ever busy with state affairs.

Queen Alexandra's maids of honor are notably pretty girls, among them being two young beauties, the Misses Vivian.

The Story Denied.

Toronto World.

United Canada says that when Hon. William Harty insisted on retiring from the Ontario cabinet the portfolio of public works was offered to J. J. Foy, K.C., M.L.A., if he would change his politics, and that Mr. Foy indignantly refused to desert his principles or his constituents for the office. Mr. Foy laughed when the World asked him yesterday if the story was true. "There is nothing in it," he replied, thus spoiling a good story.

Sad Death At Tweed.

The Tweed News announces the death on Thursday of Mrs. George W. Lafountain, aged twenty-seven, survived by a husband and four girls. The paper says: "At the hour of 10:15 o'clock, after two sweet baby girls were born to her, the shadow of death hovered near and claimed her spirit, ere she had a moment to bid farewell to loved ones. Deceased was married seven years ago. Her sudden demise was a great shock."

It Is A Wonder to Everybody

How Speedily and Certainly the Wretched Itching and Uneasiness of Piles is Relieved and Thoroughly Cured by

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

It seems wonderful that after all these years of investigation and research the physicians are still helpless to relieve and cure one of the most common and most distressing afflictions to which men and women are subject, viz., itching, bleeding piles. In nine cases out of ten the doctors still recommend a surgical operation, with its expense, extreme pain and danger, as the only cure for piles.

Prejudice alone keeps the physicians from prescribing Dr. Chase's Ointment in all cases of piles. It has made for itself a world-wide reputation, and is sold under a positive guarantee to cure any case of piles, no matter of how long standing, no matter how many operations have failed, and no matter how immense has been the suffering.

Rev. S. A. Duprau, Methodist minister, Consecon, Prince Edward County, Ont., states: "I was troubled with itching and bleeding piles for years and they ultimately attained to a very violent form. Large lumps or abscesses formed, so that it was with great difficulty and considerable pain that I was able to stool. At this severe crisis I purchased a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, but I had little or no faith in it, as I had tried various remedies before and to no purpose.

"Now imagine how great and joyous was my surprise to find that just the one box cured me, so that the lumps disappeared, and also the external swelling. I feel like a different man to-day, and have not the least doubt that Dr. Chase's Ointment saved me from a very dangerous and painful operation and many years of suffering. It is with the greatest pleasure and with a thankful heart that I give this testimonial, knowing that Dr. Chase's Ointment has done so much for me. You are at perfect liberty to use this testimonial as you see fit for the benefit of others similarly afflicted."

You are invited to make this test and prove to your own satisfaction the almost magical power of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Ask your neighbors who have used it, what they think of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Use it when you have the opportunity, and remember that it is guaranteed to cure any case of itching, bleeding, or protruding piles; 60c. a box, at all dealers, or by mail from Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

WHIG'S FASHION LETTER.

LATEST STYLES AS SEEN IN NEW YORK.

Gowns to be Worn at the Horse Show—Lace Creations in Evening Dresses—A Novelty in Muffs—Some Striking Jewels.

New York, Nov. 15.—The gowns to be worn at the horse show which opens Monday, will prove the most gorgeous ever seen at this famous exhibition of beauty and the beast, and, it may be added, with the advent of these styles the positive fashions for winter will be declared, for the horse show finally settles the question of winter styles as does Easter those of spring.

A tour of the fashionable dressmaking establishments of Gotham has now proven that any particular material will be in the ascendency, for horse show gowns are built of every fabric which comes up to the fashionable woman's idea of luxury and beauty.

Among evening designs, however, lace creations come as near being in the lead as any others. A delightful gown is of white lace over a foundation of the same color satin. The satin shows plainly through the delicate net work of the lace and produces an extremely rich effect. The bodice is fitted closely across the back and in front pouches a little. It is finished at the bottom by a narrow bias belt of the satin covered with the lace, and is fastened by tiny buckles of rhinestone and silver.

A princess effect is obtained by the arrangement of the white chiffon that trims the bodice and the skirt. This starts at the waist line in the back, perhaps two inches each side of the centre, and is laid in long puffs and drawn closely to the waist bodice, slanting outward a bit until it reaches the lower line of the arm's eyes, where it is drawn through an open mesh of the lace and carried horizontally for about two inches toward the sleeves and then again drawn through the lace and carried over the shoulders, close to the sleeves and down the front.

At the left a large, flat choux of the chiffon is caught with a diamond ornament. The puffs continue from the waist down to the hem of the skirt, caught at intervals in meshes of the lace. The finish of the long plain skirt, which is slightly trained, is formed by narrow bands of long haired fur, brown in color, and some four or five inches above the extreme edge is a second band of the fur, the same width. The close fitting sleeves are of lace over satin, and have two bands each above the hand, covered with lace. Here the buckles again appear.

To be worn over the gown is a three-quarter length coat of white satin faced cloth, fitting to the waist, stitched and strapped in a downward direction. Ther is a deep basque cut to the waist, forming panels. This very smart garment is trimmed with a collar and revers composed of strappings in black and white satin and other revers of white cloth are embroidered with touches of gold. The full sleeves are finished with a tight band at the wrist. Completing the costume is a chic hat which has a cap of brown formed of encircling half inch folds of black satin. The brim is formed of black velvet and at the left a full black ostrich plume is fastened.

A gown which will be worn on the opening day of the show is of delicate peachblow cloth of satin finish. The skirt is laid in deep, lengthwise plaits, stitched perhaps an eighth of an inch from their outer edges. These plaits are some three inches in width, and the stitching stopping above the knees, the plaits fly loose. The skirt lies on the floor a bit in front and more in the back. The jacket is a plain Eton coat. The body of it is formed of two-and-a-half inch widths of the cloth. The strips are stitched on their lower edges and lap over one another and run around the body. The body comes to the waistline and opens in front, over a vest of soft yellow, almost covered with lengthwise strips of white stitched on, the yellow and white alternating in inch-wide strips. The jacket sleeves are coat-shaped and are absolutely plain, and end in deep points over the hands. With this costume is worn a small all-black hat and a small boa formed of alternate layers of black and white tulle.

Another smart frock designed for one of the most beautiful women in New York society, a blonde, is in black cloth, so highly finished and yet so soft and clinging that it might be a lousine. The skirt sweeps the floor all around, but it is not noticeably long in the back. It has rib tucks, and these grow longer toward the centre back—to fit smoothly over the hips. The back breadth is laid in three underlying plaits on each side, quite deep plaits, too, and with a movement flare a bit, apparently not being caught. Down the centre of the front runs a broad band of rich black silk passamenterie.

The tight fitting bodice, which, by the way, could be called a coat as well, ends at the sides, and is held by a belt, a folded band of silk, and in the back there is a postillion, perhaps eight inches long and six wide. Three strips of handsome and curved galloons of heavy black silk passamenterie begin at the neck and the centre of the shoulder seams and run with but little deviation from straight lines down the bodice and to the end of the postillion. The front is closed smoothly and trimmed with braid, but is partially concealed by the ends of a medium sized boa made of plaited black tulle, with long ends.

A novelty in muffs is shown in this costume. The affair is composed of black satin with full ends of frilled net edged with lace, all black. The hat which completes the costume is a Gainsborough, black in hue and draped with a black chiffon veil.

Jewelers are showing some very striking jewelry which will be a delight to the woman with masculine tastes. Rings, chains and jewels are very "mannish" and very smart indeed they are considered. A splendid example of the new style is found in a ring of Burmese gold, large and heavy, with a cluster of pink rubies around a demantoid centre.

Amethysts bid fair to replace the pearl this winter and are sold at the most appalling figures. The stone is most effectively set in old silver or very dull gold, or even in platinum, which is the least obtrusive of all. In fact the presents style tends toward the concealing of the setting of all jewels and while this condition of affairs is not considered favorable for the dealer in imitation stones, it is certainly one which allows those fortunate enough to possess handsome stones a chance to show them to advantage.

THE HOME AND THE SCHOOL

Lady Moon.

"Lady moon, lady moon, sailing so high,
Drop down to baby,
From out the great sky!"
"Babykin, babykin, down far below,
I hear thee calling,
I hear thee calling,
Yet I cannot go."

But lady moon speaketh thee soft shining rays
"Moon loves the baby,"
The moonlight says:
In her house dark and blue, though she must stay
Kindly she'll watch thee,
Kindly she'll watch me,
Til dawns a new day.

What The Stars Saw.

By Florence E. Glad.

The long, peaceful night was just changing into morning, and the calm moon, surrounded by her star children, was listening while they in turn told what they had seen.

Said the first star: "In an old apple tree, I saw a dear little mother bird spreading her warm wings over her babies in the nest, and the wind gently rocked them all to sleep."

Then said the moon: "You, my child, beheld a beautiful sight."

Said the second star: "I saw a little dog with a sore foot, limping along the street, and a boy picked him up saying, 'Why, you poor little thing! I'll take you home and feed you and give you a nice piece of carpet to sleep on, and make your feet well; and, as you seem to have no home, you shall live with me.'

The moon said again: "You, my child beheld a beautiful sight."

The third star said: "I saw a stranger, travelling along a dusty road. He stopped at a cottage and asked for a glass of water, and a bright-eyed maiden very gladly ran to the well and brought some to him, after which he felt much refreshed, and soon reached home."

And again the moon said: "You, my child, beheld a beautiful sight," and she went on to say that if we only look, we can see beautiful things by day or by night, for the world is full of them.

Then all the stars listened, for the calm moon was ready to tell what she had seen. She said: "I peeped in at an upper window, and there I saw three little children at their mother's knee thanking the heavenly Father.

"For rest and food and loving care
And all that makes the world so fair."

Then said the stars: "Ah! dear mother, you very surely beheld a most beautiful sight!"

The Wind.

I saw you toss the kites on high
And blow the birds across the sky,
And all around I heard you pass
Like ladies' skirts across the grass.
O wind a-blowing all day long
O wind that sings so loud a song.

I saw the different things you did
But always you yourself you hid.
I felt you push, I heard you call
But could not see yourself at all.
O wind a-blowing all day long
O wind that sings so loud a song.

Oh, you that are so strong and cold
Oh blower are you young or old?
Are you a beast of field or tree
Or just a big, strong child like me?
O wind a-blowing all day long
O wind that sings so loud a song.

"What mean ye, fellow citizens, that ye turn every stone to scrape wealth together, and take so little care of your children to whom one day ye must relinquish it all?"—Socrates.

Children's Money.

By Katherine Beeke.

Most parents and children are of the opinion, in a general way, that children should be taught how to handle money, how to save, how to give, how to spend. We want to teach them the essence of the wisdom found on the tombstone of a certain rich man in these words:

What I spent, I had,
What I saved, I leave behind me.
What I gave away, I take with me.

The question is, however, how shall we go about it?

In the first place it seems to me that a child has a right to a part of the family income, just because he is a member of the family. Women and children should be partners in the household concern, not pensioners on the bounty of the head of the house. The woman part of the question has, perhaps been sufficiently exploited; but it still seems right to many people that money should be doled out to children, or given according to the caprice of the moment, instead of any recognition being made of the right of a child to the possession of money.

For the same reason that a certain proportionate part of the family income belongs to the child, the child's loving, cheerful service belongs to the home and those who make the home. Nothing is more unhomelike and sordid than the sight of a child doing for money what he should do for love, or the sight of a mother bribing a child to do something which should come from him freely.

The child's money and the child's service in the home should be two entirely distinct matters. I do not mean that a mother should never pay a child for doing work; but when she does the transaction should be a purely commercial one. She should pay him as she would an outsider, and he should work for her as he would for any one else from whom he expected compensation.

Where there is coal to be brought in, kindling prepared, a fire to be cared for, a lawn mowed, snow shovelled, parcels carried, sewing or house-work done, for which a mother would pay an outsider, and her own children wish to earn the money, which would otherwise go to some one else, I do not see why they should not be let to earn it; although the wisdom of having work, which children could do put into other hands, is open to question.

But when the mother pays Mary for taking care of the baby for an hour, or John doing an errand, when Mary has to be bribed to keep her room tidy and John paid for getting up in the morning, it is quite another thing. John and Mary owe to their parents not only filial obedience, but such contribution to the comfort and well being of the home as they are able to render. On the other hand, the children have a right to such money as their parents think wise to allow them.

To the mothers who feel that they cannot afford to give their children anything which looks like a regular allowance, I would suggest an adding up of sums expended in a year for candy, toys, shows, pencils, marbles, tops, jumping ropes and school materials. This sum if divided by fifty-two would in all probability amount to something a week. Would it not be better to let the children have that something a week regularly, with the necessary instruction and responsibility which its pre-arranged possession would involve?

A mother of my acquaintance began giving her little daughter an allowance on her sixth birthday, and gave with the amount a small responsibility. To be more definite, the sum was five cents and the responsibility was school and lead pencils. A lead pencil costs five cents, but it lasts many weeks, and the child is encouraged to save for Sunday-school and also for future jumping ropes and "jacks." She is required of course, to buy the pencils, but, aside from that her mother is willing that she should learn by spending, if she chooses to spend, that she cannot buy peanuts and valentines with the same money. This mother is willing to let her child take the consequences of injudicious expenditure that she may learn its opposite. The plan is to increase both the allowance and the responsibilities each birthday, and to let her little girl know the joy of true giving, of self-sacrifice, and of wise forethought."

A Lyndhurst Presentation.

On Wednesday, J. P. Bower, churchwarden, escorted a deputation of the ladies' aid, of St. Peter's church, Seeley's Bay, to the rectory. Dinner was prepared with the good things the ladies brought with them. After reading and prayer an address was read by Mrs. Bower on behalf of the ladies' aid. A suitable reply was made by the rector, on behalf of Mrs. Forster and himself. The presents were a beautiful oak rocking chair for Mrs. Forster and a handsome musk ox robe for Mr. Forster.

The address read: "The members of the Ladies' aid of St. Peter's church, Seeley's Bay, sincerely express regret that you are about to remove to another part of the diocese. We admire the staunch, persevering purposeful life you have led amongst us, and we believe your efforts to have been as conscientiously directed, as they have been fearlessly performed. We shall always cherish loving remembrances of the kindly offices which we have been enabled to perform each to the other. We present you with these tokens, as evidence that our words are heartfelt and that you may have constantly before you some reminders of the friends you are about to leave. We pray that God's richest blessings may reward your labors, wherever you go, and eventually we hope to greet you in the land of eternal peace, whence you have ever tried to guide us. Mrs. J. P. Bower, Mrs. J. Gainford, Mrs. Wm. Berry, Miss Mary Gainford. Signed on behalf of the members.
