KATIE'S TWO CHRISTMASES.

According to the little timepiece over the mantle-shelf it is ten o'clock. Ten o'clock of a drear, dark morning, some two or three days before Christmas; and Mr. Thornton—as the sleek-looking, softly-spoken individual who officiates in the capacity of confidential servant to that gentleman has just informed the early visitor who has dropped in at his chambers—has not yet made his appearance, although his breakfast, together with his morning's letters and papers, stand waiting for him on the daintily-spread table in front of the fire.

A handsomely-furnished room, with a soft, dark Turkey carpet, richly-carved furniture, heavy gilt mouldings and a number of well chosen chromos and engravings on the walls, but with a good deal about it beside the rather extensive collection of photographs of famous singers and actresses over the mantle-piece that loudly betoken the bachelor condition of its owner, but which look, as John Redpath is thinking as he sits here in the warm glow of the fire, most intensely comfortable to anyone coming in as he has done out of the chill, yellow fog, and the cold, wet London streets.

A luxurious, sybaritical apartment in which there are nowhere any signs of any particular study or pursuit, except the pursuit of pleasure, and which looks like what John Redpath very well knows it to be, the home of an idle, purposeless man of fashion; but the visitor's ruminations are not destined to long endurance, for the door opens, and Mr. Philip Thornton, still in dressing gown and slippers, makes his appearance.

A decidedly dandified sort of dressing-gown it is, too, with its crimson silk tassels and lining, in the eyes of plain John Redpath, whose special weakness, if he has one, certainly does not lean toward personal adornment; and as two friends stand for a moment grasping each other's hand in the soft glow of the dim fire-lit room an observer taking in the tout ensemble of the two men, might have been sorely puzzled to understand the tie of sympathy and good-fellowship that has always united them from their earliest school-days until now.

Never were two men more unlike; for while John Redpath, who is a hard-working lawyer with his own way in the world to make, and two younger brothers utterly depending upon him for support and education, is plain in face, and quiet and methodical in habits, Philip Thornton is one of the handsomest men in London and as gay and thoughtless as any among the fast extravagant set to which he belongs.

And that is the worst of his faults in the opinion of his faithful old friend John, who, while lamenting his follies, will never believe anything worse of him than thoughtlessness.

Nobody denies that Philip Thornton is a good fellow, though a gay, extravagant spendthrift; and thoughtless, John has been obliged to admit him to be; "but then Philip is never heartless, never designedly bad, or hard, or cruel, mind you;" he is in habit of remarking when anyone attacks the character of his gay, handsome, debonair friend, who, standing before him now, looks, he cannot help thinking, like a man to whom life has been one long holiday, and whose white shapely hands have never done anything harder or coarser than pluck flowers or carry fans for the ladies, who pet, and flatter, and spoil him to the top of bent, partly out of consideration for the large fortune he is supposed to possess.

"Sit down, old fellow. It is wonderfully good of you to drop in upon me at such an abnormal hour as this, and all for the sake of looking into that dreadfull bill business of mine. Mason bring another plate and cup. But see what it is to be a lawyer! Upon my soul, John, I wish I had your capacity for business. I do, indeed! For if I should ever come to the end of my banking account, I wonder what would become of me! Depend upon it, in such a case I should be reduced to the necessity of begging my bread or blowing my brains out, for work doesn't agree with my constitution any better than it does with that of a Red Indian, who would rather die than do it; and if these confounded money-lenders go on in the way they have been going on lately it may come to it some day, and no mistake. But come along, old fellow, breakfast first and business afterwards; and while you are looking through those bills and accounts for me, I'll take a run down to the club, taking it for granted, you know, that you would rather have my room than my company when anything like business is under way."

"You mean if you go on in the way you have been going," John Redpath remarks, totally ignoring the last part of his friend's remarks. "I am quite of your opinion, Phil; if you go on borrowing money at the rate of a hundred per cent. I have not the slightest doubt of your ultimately coming to grief; and remember——"

"For Heaven's sake don't preach, old fellow," is the reply. "I don't deny the fact that I am in a tight place, and that it is all my own fault! But what I ask of you is, help me out. Show me how to get out of the clutches of that confounded usurer who lent me the last five hundred, and my eternal blessing is yours. More than that, if it will be any comfort to you, I will give you my word as a gentleman never to borrow of him or any of his tribe again."

Breakfast over, Philip Thornton, who has handed over to his friend the pile of bills and accounts he has promised to audit for him, turns his attention to the collection of tradesmen's bills and perfumed invitations lying beside his plate; and which, one after another, are opened and tossed carelessly aside until he comes upon one, the last of the pile, which evidently belongs to neither of the two classes already mentioned.

"As if I had not bother enough of my own just now," he exclaimed, as, having glanced impatiently through its contents, he tossed it pettishly over to his friend.

"Here am I, scarcely knowing which way to turn for five pounds, yet people write to me for assistance. That comes of having the reputation of being a rich man. By Jove! old boy, I wish I were you. Nobody thinks of asking you for help, but upon my word if the truth could be known I believe you are a richer man than I am, in spite of all the money left me by the dear old man who had the honor to be my paternal relative. Sorry not to be able to help them in any way, of course; it is Dantree's daughter who has written to me, John. Don't know if you remember to have heard me speak of her—father sick and not able to paint—a miserable story of poverty, and want, and sickness. And, by Jove! I do wish people would not make me the recipient of their troubles. I hate to think of misery in any shape; it makes a man feel creepish and uncomfortable. But I must be off, Redpath. Drop in upon me this evening at dinner-time; you can tell me, then, the result of your investigations, you know. Ta, ta, dear boy, I leave you to those accounts. Hope you will make them look brighter than I did; but then I am not good at arithmetic, it isn't my forte, you know."

And Philip Thornton, who has changed his dressing-gown and slippers for his hat and coat, goes out with the last new opera on his lips to his cab, the driver of which receives orders to drive, in the first place to the florist's, where he orders a costly bouquet for the pretty singer whose sweet voice is just now enchanting all London, and then to his jeweler's, where he selects another indispensable requisite for himself in the shape of an expensive solitaire ring without a thought of John Redpath and the pile of bills and poor little Katie Dantree's letter which he has so unceremoniously turned over to him.

"Poor child!" muses John Redpath, as, forgetting all about the accounts, he sits studying over the few lines in which he has read a story that touches his heart if it cannot reach Philip Thornton's. "It seems hard—hard to be in such poverty and sorrow as this at any time; doubly hard at this happy Christmas time, when one likes to think of everyone having some glimpse of happiness. I should have thought Phil might have helped them a little. It isn't like his usual generosity. I wonder if I could possibly contrive a trifle."

Later this same December day a young girl, with a sweet, dusky face, which Nature, you feel at a glance, originally intended should be bright, sunny, and gay, but which long suffering and keen anxiety have worn pale, thin, and pitifully haggard, stands at the window of a chill, sparely furnished room at the top of a house in one of the shabbiest localities in the neighborhood of Leicester Square, looking down with strained, anxious eyes upon the cold, wet, twilight street.

Everything in the room, from the faded black dress of the girl at the window, worn at the seams and frayed at the cuffs and edges, to the bare, broken walls and carpetless floor, the almost fireless grate, bespeaks the same hard, pitiless tale of poverty.

At the further end of the room, shaded by a curtain from the draught from the rickety old door, stands a bed, on which a man, with a large grey beard, and features that must have been handsome in happier days, and in whose appearance, in spite of his sickness and poverty, are the unmistakable marks of culture—is slowly dying. A fact the girl, who stands watching so anxiously for the postman's coming, has been trying with such a cold, sick fear at her heart to think of all day, if not with resignation, at least with submission.

A pallet and brushes lie scattered on the table, and in the opposite corner stands an easel, with a newly-finished picture—a picture on which the last touches are scarcely dry; but it is the last the thin, white hand lying so listlessly on the coverlet will ever paint, the last the tired brain will ever create.

The poor artist, after long months of sickness and poverty, during which the cunning of his hand and the old creative power of his fancy, has been slowly slipping away from him, lies quietly dying of disappointment and want, dying with, perhaps, the bitterest knowledge a man can carry down with him to the grave, that in spite of all his honest toil, his high hopes and lofty aspirations, his life has been a miserable failure from first to last, and that the only creature who loves him and depends upon him will be left friendless and destitute when he is gone.

For himself it matters little now. The affairs of this world are over and past, and done with for him. Brain, fancy, and body have all given out. For the first time in hard life he is a totally indifferent as to whether the world ever recognizes his genius or not. He has but one earthly care now, his daughter—poor, pretty, helpless little Katie. If he could but see some prospects for her—if he could but know she would have a friend when he is gone—and opening his eyes he is surprised to see his daughter standing over him with an open letter in her hand.

"Will you forgive me, papa?" she says, her lips quivering with emotion. "Papa, dear, I have done for you what you were too proud to do for yourself. I have written to your old friend, Philip Thornton, and told him just how ill your are, dear, and he has kindly sent us back a note for twenty pounds."

* * * * * *

It is Christmas Eve in Kent; a cold, frosty afternoon, with roads hard frozen, and a crisp hoar-frost that has been lying all day upon the lawns, the evergreens, and the dry leaves rustling drearily along the deserted garden-paths; and now as the early dusk is closing in, a few flakes of snow come drifting slowly down from the leaden sky that has been overhanging everything from the first dawn of light, and that seems to hold out a fair promise of a heavy snow-fall before morning.

"What a dismal afternoon! I am afraid Katie must have had rather a cheerless journey down," soliloquizes a lady, who, looking from a window of a comfortable old country parsonage, glances expectantly down the road leading to the village and the railway-station. "But the train must have been in some time; and if Tom drives quickly, they will be here in a few minutes," she adds, turning to stir the fire and to take a last look at the cosy old parlor, with its books, its music, and pretty Christmas decorations that look so wonderfully festive and seasonable, in order to make sure that everything is at its best for the reception of the expected guest.

"He little suspected that I was Dantree's daughter. I had never told him of my having changed my name in accordance with the terms of Uncle George's will, and the remark he made on the subject told me what a mistake I had been making. It was not Philip Thornton, Marian, who sent me that money, but John Redpath; though it was by one of the strangest chances in the world I ever found it out; and he has no suspicion to this day that I know it. But, Marian, I have learned more than this. I have learned what an utterly heartless, selfish nature there is under Philip Thornton's handsome exterior. He is not fit to be mentioned in the same breath with plain John Redpath, as you call him, though how anyone looking into his kind, good sensible face can call him "plain" is the greatest wonder to me. And, somehow, John and I have seen a good deal of each other lately; and—and, in short, dear, John and I are going to be married in the spring."

"Married in the spring!" and Mrs. Fulton holds up her hands in amazement. "And to John Redpath, too! Really, Katie, I don't know what you think about it; it seems to me as if it is quite a little romance that has grown up out of those two Christmases of yours.

The Greatest Remedy Known.

DR. KING'S NEW DISCOVERY for consumption is certainly the greatest medical remedy ever placed within the reach of suffering humanity. Thousands of once hopeless sufferers now loudly proclaim their praise for this wonderful Discovery to which they owe their lives. Not only does it "positively cure" consumption, but coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, hay fever, hoarseness, and all affections of the throat, chest and lungs, yield at once to its wonderful curative powers as if by magic. We do not ask you to buy a large bottle until you know what you are getting. We therefore earnestly request you to call on your druggist and get a trial bottle for ten cents which will convince the most skeptical of its wonderful merits, and show you what a regular size bottle will do. For sale by all druggists.

Man's Noblest Work.

This is an age of great works and wonderful inventions. Steam, electricity, water, air, all are made to serve man, but unquestionably the greatest inventions are those which preserve man's health and prolong his life, and among the greatest of these is DR. KING'S NEW DISCOVERY for consumption. Its effects are truly wonderful and hundreds are happy to-day who once looked forward to an early grave. For coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, loss of voice, hay fever, hoarseness, croup, or any affection whatever of the throat, chest or lungs, DR. KING'S NEW DISCOVERY will positively cure. We can cheerfully recommend it to all, and can unhesitatingly say it is the only sure cure for throat and lung affections. Trial bottle ten cents; regular size $1. For sale by all druggists.

YOU HAVE NO EXCUSE.

Have you any excuse for suffering with dyspepsia or liver complaint? Is there any reason why you should go on from day to day complaining with sour stomach, sick head ache, habitual costiveness, palpitation of the heart, heart burn, waterbrash, gnawing and burning pains at the pit of the stomach, yellow sik, coated tongue, and disagreeable taste in the mouth, coming up of food after eating, low spirits, &c. No! it is positively your own fault if you do. Go to your druggist and get a bottle of GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER for 75 cents. Your cure is certain; but if you doubt this, get a sample bottle for 10 cents; try it. Two doses will relieve you. For sale by J. G. King, Kingston, and all first class druggists.

CHICAGO AHEAD.—All the world now looks up to Chicago as the great western metropolis of America, being far ahead of all competing cities; but none the less so, in its line, is Electric Bitters. From their real intrinsic value they have advanced to the front, and are now far ahead of all other remedies, positively curing where everything else fails. To try them is to be convinced. For sale by all druggists, at fifty cents per bottle

TIMELY ADVICE.—Everybody at this season of the year is liable to sudden attacks of sickness, and it is important to have on hand a remedy, prompt in action, and yet safe alike to young and old. Nerveline promptly cures chills, spasms and cramps. Nerveline never fails to cure vomiting, diarrhoea, cholera and dysentery. Nerveline is, in fact, the most useful family remedy in the world. Sold by Polson & Co.

THE VOLTAIC BELT CO., Marshall, Mich., will send their celebrated Electro-Voltaic Belts to the afflicted upon 30 days trial. Speedy cures guaranteed. They mean what they say. Write to them without delay.

INDIAN TROUBLES.

American and Canadian Indians Engage in Combat near the Rockies.

A despatch dated Fort Quappelle says a serious fight recently occurred on the Cotean Hills, between Canadian and American Indians. The former tribes were from Oceanman's and White Bear's bands, left their reservies at Moose Mountain, some seventy miles northwest of Forth Ellice, about the beginning of September in the pursuit of buffalo. They soon reached the Missouri Coteau range of hills extending from the international boundry in a northwestern direction toward Old Wive's Lake. Campingon the edge of the Coteau Hills, one morning as they were breaking camp they observed a party of Indians riding toward them over the hills. As it was evident from the appearance of the riders that they were on the warpath the Canadian Indians immediately corralled their carts and threw their tents over them. When the rider came up Oceanman's brother jumped out of the corral and asked what they were. The rider replied, "Indians and Grosventres," and asked who the Canadians were. No sooner had the reply "Stoneys and Ojibways" been given than the Americans, who were armed with Winchester repeating rifles and well supplied with ammunition, opened fire. Oceanman's brother retreated to the corral in which he and his companions kept up a brisk fire on the attacting party. Though only armed with flint arms the Canadian Indians resisted so desperately that the fight was kept up all day, all the male Canadian Indians being killed, as well as a number of woman and children. Three women succeeded in escaping.

An Ojibway from Fort Ellice, who was following in the track of the Canadian Indians, heard the firing in the evening and concluded that they had found buffalo, and pushed on rapidly to overtake them. When he got near he noticed the American Indians, of whom there were between twenty and thirty, in full retreat, as they evidently thought that he and his two or three companions were the advance guard of a large party. On reaching the corral the Ojibway entered it, and found the bodies of eight dead Indians, besides women and children. Among the dead, were the brother of the Stoneys' chief, Oceanman, and his head man. Near the corral was the body of an American Indian, which he scalped. There were also three Winchester rifles left on the ground, which justifies that the American Indians carried off some of their dead. The Ojibway took the scalp to Fort Ellice, where the scalp dance was kept up for several days. The scalp has been divided up and sent to various friendly bands, in the hope that they may be induced to make common cause against the Americans. Oceanman has communicated with the Indian Commissioners, stating that when the treaty was made he believed that war was to be at an end and that the Indians were to live in peace. He is now poor and ill supplied with ammunition, and expects the Government to defend him and his from the American Indians who may cross the line to the Canadian hunting grounds. If something is not done he threatens to go on the warpath next year.

Zopesa.

Zopesa, from Brazil, has now come into Canada. It is a mild purgative, acting as a wonder, and giving strength and energy to the digestive apparatus of the human stomach, correcting and increasing the acids. It is strongly anti bilious and carries off all surplus bile, tones up the liver, gives sound digestion and speedy health to the dyspeptic and bilious. Ask Heath & Gunn or Henry Wade for a ten cent sample bottle and test Zopesa, the new compound. Large eight ounce bottles 75 cents.

Can't Preach Good

No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a law suit well, doctor a patient, or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters. See "truths" and "proverbs," other column.

OFFICE OF Commonwealth Distribution Company,

Courier-Journal Building, Louisville, Ky., Sept. 22, 1880.

In direct violation of an agreement with Ex-Postmaster General Key, ordering the delivery of Registered Letters and the payment of Money Orders to the undersigned, pending the litigation in the United States Supreme Court, the Third Assistant Postmaster General has seen fit, in the absence of his superiors, to act, aside said order. The grounds upon which he justifies this action are, that all lotteries in Kentucky have been repealed, and are therefore illegal, and being illegal, are necessarily fraudulent, when, in fact the franchise under which this Company draws, while that of the Louisiana Lottery Company, has never been repealed, and yet the Post Office Department discriminates in favor of that Company.

Comment is useless. Legal action will at once be taken by this Company, and, until further notice, correspondents are requested to send all remittances by plain letter or by express. Don't send by money order or registered letter.

HEALTH, TONE AND VIGOUR.

Sir Astley Cooper's VITAL RESTORATIVE,

FOR

Strengthening the Nerves and Purifying the Blood.

TRADE MARK: "Elixir Vitæ."

This Preparation is Pronounced by the Most Eminent Members of the Medical Profession to be Unequalled for its Power in Replenishing the Vitality of the Body.

By its supplying all the essential constituents of the blood and nervous substance and for developing all the powers and functions of the system to the highest degree.

IT IS AGREEABLE TO THE PALATE AND INNOCENT in its action, while retaining all its extraordinary properties, and, as a specific, surpassing all the known therapeutic agents of the day for the speedy and

Permanent Cure of

Nervous prostration, Liver Complaints, Palpitation of the Heart, Dizziness, Noises in the Head and Ears, Loss of Energy and Appetite, Hypochondria, General Debility, Indigestion, Incapacity for Study or Business, Lassitude, Trembling of the hands and Limbs, Impaired Digestion, Mental and Physical Depression, Consumption in its first stages, Impaired Sight and Memory, Nervous Fancies, Impoverished Blood, Nervous Debility in all its stages, Premature Decline, Shortness of Breath, and all morbid conditions of the system arising from whatever cause.

THE ACTION OF THE VITAL RESTORATIVE IS TWO-FOLD, on the one hand increasing the principle which constitutes nervous energy, and on the other the most powerful blood and flesh generating agent known; therefore, a marvellous medicine for renovating impaired and broken down constitutions. It quickly improves the digestion of assimilation to such a degree that, where for years an emaciated, anxious, cadaverous and semi vital condition has existed, the flesh will rapidly increase in quantity and firmness, and the whole system return to a robust state of health.

The Vital Restorative

acts electrically upon the organization; for instance, it soothes nature to generate that human electricity which renews and reinstils the osseous, muscular, nervous, membranous and organic systems. It operates on the system without exciting fever or thereby upon the nervous fluid as is the process. It moves the lungs, lives, heart, kidneys, stomach and intestines with a harmony vigorous yet sublimes, unparalleled in medicine.

The Vital Restorative

gives back to the human structure, in a palatable form, the phosphoric or animating element of life which has been wasted and owing to an impoverishment of the cerebral matter and nervous system of a nutritive, tonic and invigorating character, maintaining that buoyant energy of the brain and nerves which it renders for mind, heart, lungs, and energies, enabling overcoming fear and shyness, a feeling which many persons experience in all their actions.

Simply, the Vital Restorative maintains a certain degree of activity in the previously debilitated nervous system. He now exhibits all debilitated organs to refresh to their sound state and perform their natural functions. Persons suffering from Nervous Debility or any of the hundred symptoms which this distressing disease assumes, may rest assured of an effectual and even speedy cure by the judicious use of this most invaluable remedy.

THIS MEDICINE IS EXTENSIVELY USED IN THE ARMY, and to also in very general use in Hospitals and Public Sanitary Institutions throughout the land, as well as in private practice, and is considered as an invaluable remedy.

Beware of Spurious Imitations.

Ask for "Sir Astley Cooper's VITAL RESTORATIVE." Do not let the Chemist persuade you to take anything else. The argument of larger bottles and less price is just low and.

It is QUALITY the afflicted require, not quantity. Sold by all Chemists, at 5s 9d., 8s. 6d., 11s and 22s. per bottle.

PROPRIETORS: HILTON & HARGRAVE, 9 Northumberland place, Strand, London, England.

CAUTION.—To distinguish the genuine "SIR ASTLEY COOPER'S VITAL RESTORATIVE" are blown on each bottle, and that our Trade Mark "Elixir Vitæ" is on the label, without which it cannot be genuine.
