MY PRETTY ANNETT.

Come hither, my sunbeam, come hither to me,
How long I have treasured a secret for thee
A secret to whisper alone in thine ear,
So lightly, so gay by the birds will not hear.
The charm that hangs o'er thee I cannot forget,
Then list to me kindly, my pretty Annett.

'Tis not for the beauty of form or of face
That in my affections I give thee a place
The modest deportment, the goodness of soul,
Awaken a feeling I cannot control.
Oh, chill not that feeling with bitter regret,
But list to me kindly, my pretty Annett.

How oft with the music my path thou hast cheered
Each word thou hast spoken by me is revered.
Then hither, my darling, come hither to me,
Thy home shall be happy as happy can be.
I'll guard and protect thee till life's sun shall set,
Then say thou wilt love me, my pretty Annett.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

What the Preachers said at the Services Yesterday Sermons in Brief.

Divine service was held in the morning in the First Congregational Church, Wellington street, at which there was a large attendance. The opening service was conducted by the Rev. S. N. Jackson, and the sermon preached by Dr. Grant, Principal of Queen's University. The rev. gentleman took his text from Deut. viii., 3, "And he humbled thee and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know; that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live." He observed they were met to take part in the general thanksgiving of the whole Dominion. It was a beautiful act when we believed that our temporal blessings came from God to give thanks, and no act was more hideous when gone through as a matter of form. There were two views held on this subject. The one which positive science taught was that there was no need to thank God for his gifts, as all the products of the earth were the result of fixed laws, and that it was a waste of strength to pray to and thank God seeing that a strict observance of physical laws always yielded to man enough to satisfy his wants, and consequently moral forces had no control in the sphere of secular affairs. It was only in spiritual matters that God manifested himself directly to man. The other view was that God interfered and directed all His affairs in answer to prayer. The more special the act of Providence the more startling it was. Both were exaggerated ideas of God's relation to man in secular things, and easy of caricature and very absurd. It was making two gods—a god of nature and a god of grace. The true idea taught by Scripture was that all temporal blessings came from God through obedience to His will. The text taught this, the Jewish nation were taught it by sad experience, and Christ taught it when He said "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and all these things shall be added unto you." Man had to learn obedience by suffering, and whether in trouble or prosperity to acknowledge both as coming from God for our welfare, and to glorify His name. It was meet that this should be our theme on a day like this, when, as a people, we should unite in a general thanksgiving for the blessings of harvest, peace, health, freedom from plague, and an inheritance of the past—blessings we did not labour for but now enjoy. Let us never forget that it is from God that we derive all spiritual and temporal good, and by visiting the sick and seeking the good of others we shall be increasing our own true welfare and glorifying God.

A collection was taken up on behalf of the poor.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH.

After the service, usual on days of Thanksgiving, the Rev. F.W. Kirkpatrick spoke some words concerning the newly formed Board of Domestic Missions, for which he had asked a contribution on the occasion. A sermon was then given on the text,

"Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Ephesians v. 20.

Gratitude was spoken of as one of those moral duties which are essentially the same in all ages. It is impossible, said the preacher, to suppose that any such basis as mere utility can underlie the great moral duties of man's life. The service was designed, he said, to give occasion for the expression of thanksgiving to God for the natural blessings of His providence in supplying us with food to eat and raiment to put on and in having brought us so far safely on our homeward road. Even independently of the measure of blessing which we have received the grace of thanksgiving is due from us. It is always, and for all things, that we are to give thanks; in sorrow as well as in gladness, in adversity as well as in prosperity, when the sun is hidden as well as when it shines. It is easy to be thankful for a blue sky and for all the happiness which comes with plenty and prosperity and peace. It is much harder to be thankful when clouds conceal that sky, and narrow cirumstances, and loss and adversity take the place of these things. It is hard for us to know what is good. That which is pleasant may be unwholesome, and some things that are unpleasant are yet good for us. We are thankful to the surgeon that has restored us to health even though his knife was sharp and though his probs pierced us to the heart. If it be God's hand, even though it smites sharply, we may be thankful. Such a Father as God is smites only to heal. But most of us have far more sweetness than bitterness in our cup, and if this has been in any sense from God surely we may well give thanks. Who can be thankful enough to such a God as "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ?" Eternity shall be too short to utter all his praises, and yet this boundless Being deigns to accept our thanksgiving, presented, as it is, "in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." What renders a service acceptible to God is the amount of heart that goes with it. That heart service, the preacher bespoke, to the honor of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

METHODIST UNION SERVICE.

A union Methodist service was held in Queen Street Church at 10:30 o'clock. The attendance was not what it should have been. The pastor of the church, Rev. J. M. Hagar, delivered the thanksgiving sermon based on Exodus xxiii, part of the 16 verse: "And the feast of harvest." He claimed that the custom of thanksgiving was ordained by God, that although the ceremonial law had been dispensed with the principles of such celebrations were eternal and as binding upon the present generation as at the time they were instituted. The blessings of the recent harvest were due to God by whose miraculous power the earth was made so remarkably productive. The evidences of Divine forbearance were touched upon. The harvest was the result of human exertion with the interposition of Divine agency. The goodness of God was also referred to, likewise the great financial depression that had been felt during the past five years. It was stated that had there not been a bountiful harvest the very many of God's people would have been in great destitution. An unhappy state of things had been averted by Divine Providence. In Canada prosperity largely depended upon agricultural interests, whose success this year made it peculiarly fitting that there should be an expression of thankfulness to God. He regretted that while there were so many Methodists in this city so few were present at the thanksgiving service. He dilated upon the different ways in which gratitude to God could be manifested, and closed by saying that the most acceptable offering would be the giving of one's self to God. The choir was in attendance and gave with excellent effect the anthem "As pants the hart." Miss Barr, of Hamilton, taking the solo. While the offertory for the poor was being taken up, Miss Barr sang with exquisite taste, "One sweetly solemn thought."

ST. GEORGE'S CATHEDRAL.

Rev. Henry Wilson preached the thanksgiving sermon, his text being "The harvest is the end of the world"—St. Matt. xiii 39.

The discourse was an able one as will be observed by a perusal of the succeeding notes. The harvest, said the preacher, is the completion of the life, of the age and not of the world, only but of every separate soul. Your life and mine, beyond the grave, will differ in degree not in kind from our life here. The life of the saved soul in heaven at last, the life of the lost soul in hell, will be simply the outgrowth, the fruitage, the vintage, the harvest of the life of that soul on earth now. I know men would like not to believe this, men and women living hard, worldly, godless lives, wasting the precious hours of life in fashionable folly or in grosser forms of sin would like to have the preacher tell them of some short road to Paradise on the sick and dying bed, some way by which the sins of a life time can be made into a death bed of peace and a semblance of bliss. There are plenty of professing Christians who wish to enjoy the pleasures of sin and yet have fruit unto holiness and at the end everlasting life. Not our young men only but many a man and a woman their senior in years are sowing the wild oats of wilful sin now and hope in some vague way to reap a harvest of wheat in the end and be gathered as good seed into God's garner. There are people amongst us spending hours and precious days and great parts of the night over the wine cup and the whiskey bottle, yes, and in doings of which it is a shame even to speak, and yet will tell you they have a good hope of being saved in the end. They dream, or the devil tells them so to blind them, that they may sow to the flesh and yet reap of the spirit, that a man may sow to the wind and yet not reap the whirlwind, give himself to the flesh and the devil now and yet be alive unto God for evermore. It cannot be. It is contrary to every law of nature and of grace. Like produces like in the one as in the other. Why the simplest farmer could tell us better. He would tell us that no man in his senses would expect a harvest of wheat from a field sown with oats, and that none but an idiot would expect to have barns filled with grain from a farm which has been lying fallow all the spring and summer, and yet there are men other than farmers who are doing just this thing. There are lives in our midst to-day as fallow, as barren, of christianity as if the seed of spiritual life had never been sown in them, and yet they would think us hard and unmerciful if we told them they can have no part in the joy of God's great harvest home. And yet surely I am your truest friend and not your enemy if I tell you the truth no matter what it may cost. The harvest home of eternity is for those and those only who are now living pure, sober, earnest, lives, not talking christianity but living it. Christianity is now by faith and repentence so that we can tell, without much misgiving, what the end of the world and the end of our life will be by giving its beginning, its youth and manhood, to God and His service who is the Lord of both Seed time and harvest, and who, when He comes, will render to every man according to his work.

PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH.

This service was held at 7:30 p.m. and was well attended, the basement being filled. The pastor, Rev. T. W. Jolliffe, preached from Deuteronomy viii. 2, "And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness," &c. The preacher said we must look back as well as forward. The future is moulded and directed by the past. After sketching at some length the trials and triumphs of Israel in the wilderness, showing that their probation of forty years was one of mingled judgment and mercy, that they needed discipline and that all their chastisements were directed by infinite mercy and love, it was shown that the number, magnitude and regular occurrence of our mercies had a tendency to make us forgetful. We value our mercies most when they are withheld. We should be grateful for common mercies, for our christian privileges, and our national advantages. While it is a good thing to have a day of thanksgiving a continued thankful life is better. Thanksgiving without sacrifice is a mockery. Let the enquiry be "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits?" An appeal was made on behalf of the Widows' and Orphans' fund, to which the congregation responded
