HUGH JOHN FOR LEADER.

The acceptance of a nomination for the dominion house by Hugh John Macdonald has a significance which is not apparent on the surface. It means his retirement from the premiership of Manitoba, and after he has seen only one session of the assembly. It means that he is having some difficulty in carrying out his anti-election pledges, and by leaving office his embarrassments will reach an end. It means that he is the conservative's "man of destiny" in federal politics. Some time since the Whig intimated that he was being boomed for the party leadership, and now the first practical step has been taken for the change which is inevitable. Sir Charles Tupper cannot carry the country. He cannot rally his own party. He cannot inspire it with enthusiasm. A new man is demanded, and, as one conservative paper put it, a clean man. Hugh John Macdonald is declared to be that one, and he certainly would not leave the premiership of the province for a mere seat in parliament. It is a nervy thing on his part to accept a nomination for Brandon, the home of Mr. Sifton, and the constituency he has so long represented in the local and federal houses. It will be a fierce fight, because the friends of both men will stand by them till the last vote is cast. Mr. Macdonald is, however, likely to be the nominee for some other constituency so that failing in Brandon he may not be left out in the cold. He is perhaps the strongest man to contest Brandon with the minister of the interior, and yet the chances are that he will be defeated.

THE FADDISTS IN SESSION.

There has been another convention of independents in Toronto, or rather a second meeting of those who were in session two or three weeks ago. Those who were present put themselves on record as out of tune with the prevailing parties, and in favour of an independent organization. They also undertook to construct a platform, and when last heard from had put these planks into it:

Direct legislation.
Proportional representation.
Public ownership of public franchises.
Abolition of the contract system on government works.
Free trade.
Government banking.
More representative nominating conventions for elections.
Civil service reform.
Compulsory arbitration of strikes and industrial disputes.
Public ownership of manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor.
Total prohibition of the liquor traffic.
Taxes on land values, particularly on city property.
Adult suffrage, both sexes
Public employment for the unemployed.
The eight hour day.

Here are some good things, and some things that have been the sport of faddists. For instance municipal ownership, affected especially by the great franchises, is a popular subject, and one that may grow in favour with discussion. But the single tax, for cities, or for the country is simply out of the question. It cannot be tried in Canada, with its present tax complications, and the best friends of Henry George and his most interesting economic theories have ceased to talk about it.

And what can an independent party such as that which has been found in Canada do? Nothing. The patron movement is the most powerful of its kind that Canada has ever seen, but what has become of it? What is the experience of its two or three representatives in parliament?

They have been voting, according to their idea of the patron doctrines, and they have fallen from grace with the old political parties and been abandoned by them.

The new party can never amount to much. Why should advanced men everywhere not seek to bring their thoughts before the democratic parties and have them adopted if they are good. Why should strong men leave the party because they differ with it. Why do they not keep on with their objections and perhaps the differences may disappear. Reforms were never made by men running away from the post of duty.

A DIFFERENCE IN WAVES.

The conservatives account for the good times and the success of the federal government by saying that a wave of prosperity has been passing over the country, that any government could have done as well with it. But, coming to think of it, a wave of prosperity was alleged to have passed over the country in 1879. All the tall chimneys were alleged to be smoking, every one was alleged to be busy, and men, in the glow of enthusiasm, were heard to predict that the conservatives would rule for forty years. They held to power for eighteen years and left things in a very bad shape. The wave of prosperity had been succeeded by a bigger wave of depression, and everyone and everything was suffering. With the liberals' advent to power there was an improvement at once, and it is credited to the return of the wave of prosperity. Only that? The Globe's Ottawa correspondent has been moved to ask some very suggestive questions, thus:

"Was it a wave of prosperity that enabled this government to settle the Manitoba school question and bring peace to the many clashing interests and feelings awakened by it?

Was it a wave of depression that produced a deficit in the postoffice department for years of over $700,000 annually? and was it a wave of prosperity that gave Canada the credit of introducing imperial penny postage, that introduced all the many minor reforms in the postoffice department, that assures a surplus in the current year at the cheaper rate of postage?

Was it a wave of prosperity that induced the government to revise and lower the tariff in 1897, risking the reduction of revenue in the face of the fact that our total trade in 1896—the last returns then before them—had been less than in 1892, five years before?

Was it a wave of prosperity that induced the government to add to the free list raw materials that were necessary to encourage trade and industry in this country, or a wave of depression that prevented the previous government from doing the same thing?

"Was it a wave of depression that induced the conservative government to vote down and refuse a British preference in 1893? And was it a wave of prosperity that made this government introduce it in 1897? That brought thousands of inquiries from Great Britain to Canada asking for trade from this country, and turned the attention of the whole commercial and financial interests of Britain towards Canada immediately after this tariff change? That made the Britisher have a kindlier sentiment towards Canada; attracted millions of British capital to this country; enabled Canada to raise a loan at two and a half per cent. that will save millions on the interest of the portion of the debt to be renewed in a few years; placed Canadian securities on the trustees list in England; induced the London Times to say of the preference, "The new departure is most gratifying to all who desire to see the empire knitted more closely together, and it is the most remarkable step yet made towards the confederation of the empire;" aided enormously the work of securing British immigration to this country and brought about the cancellation of the Belgian and Germany treaties, which all colonies which to have cancelled?

"Was it a 'wave of depression' that kept the terminus of the Intercolonial in a 'ploughed field,' and a 'wave of prosperity' that brought it to Montreal, practically wiped out the annual deficit, and enabled it to compete with other lines, instead of being forced to 'fetch and carry' for them?

Was it a wave of prosperity that established effective and practical immigration work and got people to stay in Canada, instead of paying to bring them here only to leave the country? Was it a wave of prosperity that ceased giving land grants to railways?

"Was it a wave of depression that introduced the costly, cumbersome and partizan franchise act and the gerrymander act of the conservative government?

"Was it a wave of prosperity that introduced the election act of 1900, which both sides hailed with delight as aiding in the purity of elections?

"Was it a wave of prosperity that obtained concessions from the C.P.R. in freight rates that have already been, and will be, of inestimable value to the west and to the east as well?

"Was it a wave of depression that prevented the removal of the United States quarantine regulations against Canada cattle? Was it a wave of prosperity that enabled Mr. Fisher to do this in a fortnight?

"Was it a wave of depression that forced the previous government to permit the sweating system in contracts for supplies? Was it a wave of prosperity that introduced the fair wages clause into all government contracts so that all workmen get a fair wage?

"Was it a wave of depression that made the former government maintain regulations against blending Canadian and foreign tobaccos, strangling the tobacco industry? And was it a wave of prosperity or common sense that altered these regulations?

"Was it a wave of depression that made one of the chief aims of the former government in power the diversion of public funds into such contracts as the Tay canal, the Curran bridge, the Langevin block, the Levis graving dock, the Esquimalt dock and all the other contracts in such a way as to guide a portion of that money into the campaign fund of the party?

"Was it a wave of depression that prevented their diverting that money to the interests of the farmers of Canada by encouraging cold-storage transportation and assisting in the education of Canadian producers and shippers of butter, cheese, eggs, bacon, fruit and other Canadian products?

"Was it a wave of depression that made the total exports of agricultural products less in 1896 than in 1898?

"Was it a wave of depression that left accounts in the post office department to the amount of $680,000 unprovided for and unrecorded as a debt due?

"It certainly must have been a wave of depression that laid bare the nest of traitors."

It is an old saying that God helps those who help themselves, and the wave of prosperity may be said to help the government that knows how to take advantage of it. The liberals have been in luck because they have been enterprising.

EDITORIAL VIEWS.

There is a good deal of Wrigley about the new people's party, and of twenty-seven who attended it some will be wriggling out of the meshes their freshness has led them into.

The gains of the liberals in the bye-elections have been without a parallel—42 to 3. But the bye-elections always favour the government. In a general election political parties line up more evenly.

Now that the industrial fair is over the papers go for it unmercifully. The News says it has been abandoned to the fakirs. The Star says it is off its feet, and the sooner something is done to brace it up the better.

Mr. Davin does not enter another election with the gayest of hearts. He sat in the last parliament by virtue of the returning officer's vote, and he is haunted by the fear that he may not be so lucky in the next appeal!

The directors of the Midland fair should provide a down town office for the sale of tickets. The convenience of it would be very great, and it would dispense with the crowding at the entrances, which was one of the drawbacks at last year's show.

George Taylor, the conservative whip, is alleged to have it direct from Mayor Prefontaine, of Montreal, that the federal election will not take place until January. Of course Mr. Taylor is in the confidence of the liberal leaders, and they are in the habit of whispering in his ear!

The Berthier tory demonstration was a fizzle, because the weather "kept in their fields great numbers of the electors of the county and neighborhood." Too hot to go to a political pow-wow, but not too hot to work. There was something about that Berthier meeting which wants looking into.

The general committee of the Methodist church is reported to have asked for strong opposition, in the elections, to all who voted against the passage of a prohibitory law at the last session of parliament. The Methodist church had better keep out of politics. There is no luck in the business, and politics and religion will not mix.

Ontario diocese has sixty parishes; 44 were represented at the recent election. Only ten had the full complement of three representatives—St. George's, St. James', All Saint's, Kingston; Barrefield and Wolfe Island, Frontenac, St. Paul's and St. Peter's, Brockville; Descronto, Westport and Lansdowne front.

The international, inter-denominational Sunday-school work is making great progress. Twenty-nine states, and five British provinces have secretaries devoting their whole time to the work, and some of the state have several workers, whose time is devoted exclusively to the advancement of Sunday-school interests. Fully ten thousand conventions are held every year in these various states and provinces. The uplift given to Sunday-school work thereby cannot be estimated.

The annual meeting of the women's missionary society of Sydenham street Methodist church was held yesterday afternoon. The officers elected for the ensuing year are: Hon. president, Mrs. R. J. Chown; president, Mrs. E. B. Lanceley; first vice-president, Mrs. D. E. Starr; second vice-president, Mrs. James Gardiner; recording-secretary, Mrs. A. F. Chown; corresponding-secretary, Mrs. J. Hiscock; treasurer, Mrs. W. Skinner. The amount raised during the year was $250, of which the mission band raised $109. Delegates to the branch meeting in Merrickville, in October are: Mrs. E. B. Lanceley, to represent the auxiliary and Mrs. E. Crumley, the mission band.

OVER THE TEA CUPS.

When that clever Chicago girl, Lilian Bell (now Mrs. Arthur Hoyt) went abroad two years ago she wrote up her experiences for the Ladies' Home Journal, and, while the sketches were severely criticised by some readers, their originality and ready wit charmed and amused a great many others. The sketches have since been put into book form and a Canadian edition has been published by G. N. Morang, Toronto. The authoress has made a happy hit in calling her book "As Seen By Me." London, Paris, Brussels, Cairo, the Nile, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Naples, Constantinople, and other foreign cities are shown from the standpoint of a smart, imaginative and impressionable girl. What if some of the critics tell us that she did not see things exactly as they are? She does not pretend anything of the sort. She writes of things as seen by her, and there is a spicy originality about her point of view that is often lacking in the orthodox book of travels. Like a thorough little Yankee, she puts Old Glory very prominently before us, but she strongly objects to having her home narrowed down to the term United States, preferring the broader term "America," as if we Canadians had no show here. But we can take all that part of her book with the proverbial grain of salt, being interested and amused in seeing the world through Lilian Bell's humorous spectacles while we are reading the pages of "As Seen By Me."

The great international golf match at Quebec was a society as well as a sporting event last Saturday. The game was followed with the greatest interest by a large and fashionable assemblage of Quebec's golfers. Col. Cotton, of Ottawa, and Mrs. Sweeny, of Toronto, wife of Col. Sweeny, were among those present, as well as Mr. and Mrs. John C. Eno, of New York. The social features of the tournament were by no means the least enjoyable. The president of the Canadian golf association and Mrs. Watson were assisted in receiving their guests by Mrs. F. M. Gaudet, president, and Mrs. E. G. Meredith, captain of the Quebec ladies' golf club. At mid-day the players were given a lunch on the links, and in the evening the Canadians entertained their rivals to a dinner at the Garrison club, when about eighty guests sat down.

Capt. Paul Weatherbe, chief engineer of the militia department, Ottawa, (a military college graduate), was recently the recipient of a most complimentary letter from lord Strathcona in reference to the efficiency of his work in superintending the fitting up of the steamer Monterey, which carried Strathcona's Horse to South Africa. It will be remembered that Capt. Weatherbe, to expedite the forwarding of the troopers to the front, went to New Orleans from Halifax so that the work of transforming the ship went on during her voyage to Halifax. The Canadian government in a marked manner also recognized the efficient and prompt character of the chief engineer's work, night and day, in fitting out all the ships so effectually as to save every hour possible in the crisis of the war. Capt. Weatherbe has two brothers still at the front.

Miss Edith Tilly, daughter of Mr. Arthur Tilly, is to be married at the Stone church, St. John, N.B., to Mr. Bertram Winans, of Montreal, on Wednesday, September 12th.

A correspondent of the Popular Science Monthly calls attention to the following interesting passages in a letter written by Columbus shortly after his discovery of America: "Finally that I may compress in few words the brief account of our departure and quick return, and the gain, I promise this, that if I am supported by our most invincible sovereigns with a little of their help, as much gold can be supplied as they will need, indeed, as much of spices, of cotton, of chewing gum (which is only found in Chios) also as much of aloes-wood and as many slaves for the navy as their majesties will wish to demand." The date of this letter is March 14th, 1493, over 400 years ago, and it is very evident from the inclusion of chewing gum in his list of products attainable in the new country that Columbus considered it an item of considerable importance; so we may fairly assume that the chewing-gum habit was prevalent in Spain in 1492.

MIX THE CLASSES.

A Remedy For Overcrowding—Indignant Mothers.

The board of education building is a very lively place these days. There are fathers and mothers who seriously object to having their children removed from a school near at home, and sent to one a long distance away. The mothers visit the secretary's rooms in scores and that innocent individual gets the blame of all. Each woman seems to think that he is the source of all their woe, when he has nothing to do with the matter. One woman declared yesterday that she would remove from the city before she would send her boy to Cataraqui school. She gave as a reason that the school was too rough a place for her boy; that there were bold, bad boys there who used their fists and the toes of their boots anon and sometimes oftener. Another lady said she would send her daughter to a ladies' college before she would let her go to Williamsville.

All this trouble could very easily be remedied, and it is a wonder the board has remained inactive so long. Mix the classes,—put boys and girls in the same class— and there will be no overcrowding then. Neither will children have to tramp from one part of the city to another. Frontenac school now is a boys' school, while Louise is a girls' school. The girls near the former school have to travel to another and vice versa. As it is now, kindergarten pupils living on King street have to go away up to Victoria school. Then when they get to the junior third they must go to Central school, and after that they are packed off to any old place, nobody seems to know where. There is not a kindergarten or junior third class in Sydenham ward, and both classes are needed there the worst way. Mix the boys and girls as is done in the lower grades, the country schools and the collegiate institute, and all this trouble will be overcome. Why is this not done?

A Young Woman Dead.

Napanee Beaver.

Henrietta Frances Johnston, third daughter of Robert Johnston, North Fredericksburgh, died Wednesday in the full bloom of womanhood, aged twenty-five years. Deceased was a bright and winning girl, a graduate of Napanee high school. About five months ago she contracted a severe cold which led to a rapid decline. Her mother died a year ago to-day. Much sympathy is expressed for the bereaved father and brothers and sisters. The funeral took place from the house Friday afternoon; service held in St. Mary Magdalene church.
