OUTRAGE ON DECENCY.

The modesty of the average politician is not easily outraged. La Patrie is referred to as affronting common decency by cartooning Hugh John Macdonald and making his nose his dominating characteristic. It is intimated that La Patrie has done a great wrong, and one for which the people will punish Hon. I. Tarte. But it is no harm to have a man decked out as a minstrel, in Montreal, in a personation of Sir Richard Cartwright, and have him perform at the conservative meeting. There was great fun in that. A cartoon is endurable, though sometimes it is bad enough, but an impersonation of our public men is very offensive, and the Montreal politicians have yet to offer an apology. When they have done something towards atoning for their misconduct it will be in order to call La Patrie to account.

CASE OF INGRATITUDE.

It is rumoured in Montreal that in the event of the conservatives succeeding in the elections Hugh John Macdonald will become the premier and leader of the commons, and Sir Charles Tupper will be retired to the senate and become its leader! Not a word about Mr. Foster who has been doing the hard work of the party in recent years, and who had reason to seek promotion as a vacancy occurred. And Sir Mackenzie Bowell—what of him? Is he to be pursued by Sir Charles Tupper and submitted to further humiliation? He is a younger man than Sir Charles and in possession of the senate's leadership. Why should he be deposed? Is he, the former ally and colleague of Sir John Macdonald, to be retired from every position of trust and responsibility? It looks that way. And all the while, he has been playing the innocent in politics and serving the party with all the ardour of his nature. There is no limit to the ingratitude of his friends.

DANGER IN FOODS.

A painful experience in Toronto may be very suggestive to the parents and guardians of children. A little girl, Dorothy May Tupper, visiting the fair with her mother, refused to eat any refreshment but ice cream, and had not finished a service of it until she was taken very ill and had to be removed to her home. Two physicians were subsequently called in, and despite all they could do the patient gradually sank and passed away.

The case excited so much public interest that the doctors were induced to talk about it. It is alleged to have been one of several cases that Dr. Webster had treated and the origin of which was re-frozen cream. The technical name for the malady is gastro-intestinal affection, and is commonly known as "germ poisoning." The poison in ice cream is caused by refreezing old cream. In thawing the milk, which is the chief ingredient of the frozen delicacy, fermentation is set up, and immediately the compound becomes poisonous. Even fresh ice cream, continued the doctor, often contains poison, caused by the use of tainted milk. This will was frequently, he believed, deliberately used by manufacturers of ice cream, who by the clever mixing of flavourings, could destroy the odour or taste of the tainted milk, thus making detection almost impossible. Another reason why it was difficult to detect the poison, was that the ice cream froze, for a time, the organs of taste in the tongue and mouth.

An epidemic of sickness has prevailed in Toronto, and has been due to the ice cream and overly-ripe fruit. Fruit poisoning is more common than some people suppose, and it is very painful. It, too, is a gastro-intestinal affection. It can be cured, said a doctor, with prompt and proper treatment, but it can be avoided by the non-use of fruit which has a suspicious appearance. This fruit goes cheap, when it begins to spoil, and it is dear to the consumer because it is a menace to his health.

SIR CHARLES' ABNEGATION.

At the political meeting in Montreal, which the conservative leaders addressed on Monday evening, Hugh John Macdonald referred to the profound regard which Sir Charles Tupper had always entertained for the late Sir John Macdonald.

"I cannot forget," said he, "that in 1874, the people of Canada became incited in what was known as the Pacific scandal, and, thinking that the government had sold the country, turned them out of power. My father called his supporters together in caucus and in consideration of his connection with that scandal, he told them he thought it would be in their interests for him to retire and for Dr. Tupper, as he was then, to take his place. On the motion of Sir Charles, then Dr. Tupper, the meeting decided to come together again the following day. My father came the next day, but found not a single man in the room, and it turned out that Sir Charles had advised them that they ought to keep away and let the conservative party go under the old leadership. That was a case of self-abnegation that was almost without parallel in parliamentary history in Canada or elsewhere."

Was it self-abnegation or was it diplomacy? Sir Charles has never been of a very retiring nature. He has been the master builder of Canadian politics, the man who completed the confederation of the provinces—at least he says so—and the man who has never been inclined to hide his light under a bushel. If he were offered the leadership in 1874, and did not accept it, the reason is something beyond his indisposition to assume it.

This is made more apparent by his attitude when the Bowell cabinet was in a state of rebellion. He came to Canada to confer with the government in regard to questions affecting the high commissionership, and he was conveniently at hand when Mr. Foster, Mr. Haggart, Dr. Montague and the rest of them went on strike. Did he exert his influence towards the reconciliation of the malcontents? Did he advise them to give over their conspiracies and be loyal to the leader of their choice? Or did he, while Sir Mackenzie Bowell's colleagues done him to death, linger near in order to be called to the vacant office?

This talk of Hugh John will do for a day. Of course he is not looking for Sir Charles' shoes, but things are shaping that way and as "the man of destiny" he cannot avoid the inevitable when, as the Star says, the proper time arrives. That time may be very near.

EDITORIAL COMMENT.

A temperance enthusiast in the west suggests that his party support the new leader of the opposition. Why? Has he promised to enact a prohibitory act whether the people vote for or against it?

So the weeping of some people over the composition of the assessment commission has been without cause. The enquiry is to be of the most sweeping description. The croakers have been silenced.

The Montreal Star declares that not a single conservative member of parliament would be willing to see Sir Charles Tupper deposed. Isn't it looking that way? And is any one kicking about it?

The Belleville Intelligencer—Sir Mackenzie Bowell's paper—says Hugh John Macdonald is the coming man. Sir Mackenzie ought to know, and he must feel very sorry that the men who ousted him is getting his reward.

Hon. L. P. Pelletier, of Quebec, an ex-leader of the province, announces the retirement of Sir Charles Tupper, and the call of Hugh John Macdonald to the command of the conservative party. The old man is being deliberately pushed aside.

Hon. Edward Blake is visiting in Canada. He should stay here. The nationalists are not appreciating his sacrifices, and a man of his intellectual power has no right to waste his time. He can do better service in the Canadian commons.

In East York N. W. Rowell, "the man with a voice," is likely to defeat W. Maclean, "the man with a knife." The friends who have suffered Maclean's untimely jabs are now combining to slay him, and they are hurling rocks at him.

The political excitement is rising in Quebec. Mr. Tarte begins his work with a Sunday meeting. Could he not postpone it until the next day? He claimed the credit of resisting Sabbath non-observance in France. Can't he resist it in Canada?

So the Manitoba school question is not to be an issue in the election, the differences in regard to it having been "smoothed over." Such was the announcement in Montreal, at the conservative meeting, and by one who should know what he is talking about.

The Ottawa Citizen has also got it that Hugh John Macdonald is "the leader" of the party. And he is. Sir Charles Tupper thinks he is the man of inspiration, but it is only the deception by which he has been misled all his days. Hugh John is doing the leading now.

Crushed By Pillars.

London, Sept. 13.—A Rome despatch says: It is now known that signor Del Ro, whose mysterious disappearance during a railway journey was reported on the 23rd ult., met with a terrible death.

His headless body has been found on the rails some distance from the archway called the Archi, near Rome, and a streak of blood traced from this to one of the pillars of the arena, which was bespattered with blood.

It is conjectured that the unfortunate man was leaning out the window, and that his head came in contact with the arch. The train was going at full speed at the time.

YALE HYPNOTIC MIRACLES.

CURIOUS INEBRIATES IN PSYCHOLOGICAL LABORATORY.

Remarkable Demonstration by Rev. George Barton Cutten, of Nova Scotia—Thinks He Has Found a Good Cure.

The Rev. George Barton Cutten, the stalwart Nova Scotian, who made a reputation two years ago as centre rush on the Yale football team, studying theology at Yale and preaching in a suburban village, has created a sensation by coming out boldly as a believer in the power of hypnotism to cure drunkenness and other moral weaknesses, such as the cigarette habit and the morphine habit.

The Rev. Mr. Cutten says he has been practising hypnotism as a cure for such diseases for the past fifteen months and he has not met with a failure in a long list of cases.

"Parson Cutten," as Yale men call him, does not make any secret of his work. Last Wednesday he invited a number of local ministers to visit the psychological laboratory at Yale, where he has been carrying on a remarkable series of experiments. Amazedly a group of clergymen gazed at miracles of modern times. Wonderingly they listened to a short sermon preached to hypnotized hearers. They marvelled as they saw a command given to a sleeping subject obeyed when the demonstrator had restored the temporarily suspended faculties of the brain.

Ordinarily the operating room made use of by the Rev. Mr. Cutten, is a small, cell-like place, fitted with electric lights and double padded doors. Last Wednesday, however, the demonstrations were given in the lecture room of Prof. Scripture, head of the department of experimental psychology.

Two subjects had been provided. Both were inebriates, one of them middle aged, the other somewhat younger. The latter had used liquor and chewed and smoked tobacco since he was fourteen. He was hypnotized first, Aug. 10th, and now is nauseated by tobacco, though he still has a slight taste for liquor. Both appeared to be physical wrecks.

The elder man, lame and weak, mounted the platform and seated himself in a cushioned chair. The Rev. Mr. Cutten held a watch in one hand and with the other stroked the eyelids of the patient gently.

"Go to sleep; that's right; you're pretty tired, I guess. One! Two! Three! You're dozing. Now then, don't wake up until you are called," was repeated several times, and in less than thirty seconds the man sat sleeping in the chair.

"Move to this chair by the wall," was the next command, obeyed speedily.

The younger man was next summoned to the seat where they had seen his companion doze off. It took only a few more seconds to put him to sleep. The sermon began thus:

"You men have seen the seamy side of life. You are tired of the life of sin and dissipation. You want to turn from it and be clean men. There must be no more drinking, no more using of tobacco. Do you hear that (calling each man by name), and do you realize what it means? Stop! Stop it! You're not the men I take you for. You're not men at all—unless you cut off the terribly destructive habit. Now, if you stop using it, the fumes of whiskey and beer will make you ill, the smell of tobacco will cause you nausea. You are through with whiskey and rum for good! They'll make you sick, sure," said the athlete preacher, with emphasis, repeating and repeating it.

Addressing the older man, Mr. Cutten askrd: "How did you get along yesterday? Did you take strong drink?"

"No, sir; not once."

"Did you see me?"

"Once; on the street only."

"Did you have any invitation to drink?"

"An old toolmaker who used to work with me asked me in."

"Did you drink anything all day yesterday?"

"Yes; I went to the pump on the green several times for water."

The responses were given in nearly inaudible whispers.

The other patient went through a course of questioning also. He said he had no strong craving for liquor to-day, and that tobacco nauseated him.

In order to demonstrate how powerfully the men were under the hypnotic spell, Mr. Cutten bade them in succession to make a number of movements of hands and fingers and a variety of other motions.

But most interesting was the exhibition of "post-hypnotic suggestion" in the case of the older patient. Mr. Cutten said to the spectators:

"You see I am wearing neither coat or waistcoat in this warm room. I shall tell this man that on the coat which I am supposed to wear is a great sunflower, covering half my shoulder. When he awakens he'll see it and speak of it."

This is what followed:

"On my coat is a great bright flower. It's a fine, big sunflower. When I call you to awaken tell me what you know about such flowers. Come, wake up."

The man stretched out his arms and yawned. His eyes were brighter than when he came into the room, and he seemed happier. He glanced at Mr. Cutten as the latter took a chair facing him. A smile grew about his lips and he walked over to the clergyman.

"Gee whiz, that's a whopping sunflower. Do you like 'em? When I was a kid I used to dry 'em, big ones, you know, and pull out the seeds to make my initials. That's a fine one you've got, sure enough."

The other patient, who saw no sunflower, looked at his companion in amazement. Leaning over to me he asked: "Say, mister, what's he talking about? He's got no sunflower."

Asked to tell how he came to take up the investigations, and particularly to choose inebriates as subjects, Mr. Cutten said:

"I have been studying psychology at Yale for four years, under Profs. George T. Ladd, E. Hershey, Sneath, George M. Duncan and Edward W. Scripture.

"Never have I made use of hypnotism for any purpose save to benefit some one physically or as a matter of scientific research.

"The theory is briefly this: A man indulges himself to excess in things that give him momentary pleasure or excitement. If you make these pleasures nauseating the victim gives them up. Now to apply hypnotism to inebriety you simply hypnotize a person, and then while the person is in the hypnotic sleep tell them that the next time they drink liquor it will nauseate them. If, for example, you tell the patient that there is an imaginary glass of whiskey before him, and that if he attempts to drink it, it will make him ill, and then order him to drink it, he will suffer an imaginary nausea. Bring the patient out of the hypnotic sleep and then let him try to actually take a drink and he will suffer from acute nausea.

"I cannot see wherein my application of this science to fallen humanity interfers with my duties as a clergyman. On the other hand, I believe that a clergyman can do great good in the way of moral reform by practicing hypnotism. Hypnotism, of course, should only be practiced in a scientific manner. The reckless or unscientific use of hypnotism is dangerous. All my experiments have been made upon men and women rescued from the slums.

"In order to treat inebriates by hypnotism you must first get them into a mental condition in which they are willing and desirous of being cured. If you once accomplish this, hypnotism can bring about the moral cure."

Mr. Cutten believes that hypnotism will cure any nervous disease. He is now experimenting with a man who is over forty years of age, who has stuttered since he was a boy. Mr. Cutten has effected a wonderful improvement in this man's power of speech and believes that he will be able to cure him.

Mr. Cutten has a theory that hypnotic treatment would be a splendid thing for overstrained athletes. He is eager to test this theory and, if permitted, will try it on members of the Yale football team.

AN EARTHLY PARADISE.

Such Are the Fiji Islands—Some Interesting Statements.

Montreal Witness.

The Fiji Islands constitute what is literally an earthly paradise. Such is the opinion of the Rev. W. R. Livingstone, M.A., a young English clergyman, of the Anglican church, who is staying a few days in this city while on his way to England from West Australia, which has been the scene of his ecclesiastical labors during the past three years. Proceeding eastward, Mr. Livingstone, who, it may be mentioned, is a cousin of the famous explorer of that name, stopped at the Fiji Islands, making a stay there of some five weeks.

In conversation with a reporter Mr. Livingstone gave some exceedingly interesting details regarding these little-known British possessions. Some three hundred islands in all comprise the Fijian archipelago, one of which, Vita Leon, the capital of the islands, Suva is situated. Until a few years ago the town of Leonka was the capital, but it was abandoned for sanitary reasons. At Suva is the seat of Roman Catholic churches, a good school under government control, a school conducted by the Methodists and others of the Roman Catholics. There is a population of some 1,200 in the town, which also boasts of one newspaper. The police force of Suva is one of the most unique in the world in that it is the most simply uniformed. There can be wrangling among the members of the Suva police committee over clothing contracts, as the uniform of the Sauva police consists of a belt. They, of course, carry a baton, and wear a small loin cloth, but helmets, tunics, trousers and boots are not needed, the climate being such that these articles of clothing would be superfluities to a Fijian. Their hair, which is of a large and bushy growth, serves them as a head-dress, and certain it is the Fijians never suffer from sunstroke. It is a fashion among the young natives to bleach their hair with lime, which gives them a most strange appearance.

It is one perpetual summer in Fiji, says Mr. Livingstone, and there being an abundance of moisture the islands are literally covered from beach to hilltop with the most luxuriant tropical vegetation. Bananas, oranges, lemons, and other fruit grow in profusion and nature being so bountiful in providing food stuffs the Fijians lead a life of comparative ease. Mission work progresses favorably, most of it being in the hands of the Methodists. The chief industry in these islands is that of sugar, a large trade in the article being maintained with the continent of Australia. The laborers on the sugar plantations are mainly coolies from India, of which there on the plantations some 12,000. These coolies are imported from India, under a carefully organized and humane system and live lives of comparative comfort. They are attended by a staff of four physicians, paid by the government. The whole population of the islands amounts in all to 120,000, including a few Europeans.

For the islands generally there would seem to be, according to Mr. Livingstone's statement, a prosperous future, although the Fijians themselves, happy and contented in their abundance of the world's goods, have been charged with a lack of enterprise in the development of the resources of their island homes.

Race For The Lipton Cup.

New York, N.Y., Sept. 13.—To-day the race for the 81,000 cup presented by Sir Thomas J. Lipton to the New York yacht club will take place off Sandy Hook. The course is thirty miles long, and the race is open to cutters and yawls over seventy feet and not over eighty feet in racing length. The form of the cup is that of a vase, and is a work of art. It will be a hot combat, as all the crack boats are entered. Among them are the Yankee, Vanderbilt's Virginia, and the Mineola, owned by Belmont.

Said To Be Real Purchaser.

Quebec, Sept. 13.—It is stated that the C.P.R. grain elevator, on the Louise embankment, recently sold to Hon. Mr. Dobell and other parties, now turns out to have been purchased by the Canada Atlantic railway, through the exertions of the member for Quebec West. It is further stated on good authority that the Canada Atlantic railway has about completed arrangements with a large steamship line for the conveyance of their grain from Quebec.
