Painters' Kidneys.

The worst thing a painter has to contend with is the turpentine.

The lead, of course, is bad too.

But the turpentine cuts the kidneys, inflames and weakens them, makes the painter's life a dangerous and troublesome one. When a painter's backaches, its time for him to begin treating the kidneys.

DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS

will fix them up—take out the inflammation and congestion, give ease to the aching back.

Mr. J. Evanson, the well-known painter and decorator, 50 Oxford St., Toronto, Ont., said: About eight weeks ago I was taken with an excruciating pain in my back over the kidneys. It was so bad that my wife had to apply hot cloths till the doctor came and gave me morphine.

He said the trouble was due to a stone passing from the kidney to the bladder.

My water was loaded with a brick dust deposit and scalded on passing.

While in this condition I heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and started taking them.

It was not long before I got relief from pain and have been improving in health ever since. My urine is now clear and does not smart me, and I feel better than in years.

BROADBRIM'S LETTER.

The Despairing Cry Is Everywhere Heard.

SOME AWFUL TRAGEDIES.

UNITED STATES SADLY RATTLED IN POLITICS.

"I Have Supped Full of Horrors"—Shall a New Galveston Arise Over the Ashes of the Old?—The Wildest Sensation of the Week—Croker in the Saddle.

(Whig Correspondence; letter No. 1,218).

"'I have supped' full of horrors."—Shakespeare.

New York, Sept. 21.—This was the despairing cry of the stricken Thane when, crushed by disaster and hurled to ruin from which there was no escape, he was about to give up the ghost. Desolation and misery everywhere, sorrow and tears universal. From the parched and burning plains of India a cry is heard from straving millions who daily and hourly sink by the wayside on all of her great thoroughfares, deadly witnesses of that terrible calamity for which there is no prospect of surcease, or security, but death; the greatest boon the most supreme blessing that God in His mercy has granted to the children of men.

Among the rugged mountains and over the arid veldts of South Africa Britons and Boers are locked in the embrace of death, and now when martial law extinguishes the last hope of the rude Boer to a separate and independent republic, every foot of which he dyed with the blood of the unoffending native population; now that he is driven forth, hopeless and homeless, to find a shelter wherever heaven directs, let us ask ourselves if the battlefields on which he fought and the land which he cursed by his shocking massacre, barbarity and oppression of the rightful owners of the soil, were worth such costly conseeration.

Under the shadow of the great Chinese wall a polyglot army is gathered such as the world hath not seen since a barefoot monk roused the christian world to battle for the sepulchre of Christ and win it from the dominion of the Saracen. The final settlement of the Chinese question which now confronts the allied armies, inside and outside of Pekin, will not be known till the prince and king pin of oriental liars, Li Hung Chang, has handed in his final report, gathered from the dowager empress, at her fly-by-night court, and which confers on the great Li, all the rights, titles and privileges which the yellow button carries with it. If a real bona fide settlement is reached on the present unsettled foundation, it might be wisdom for Yankee Doodle to keep his weather eye open and constantly on the watch for this wily old oriental diplomat, who had evidently studied Talleyrand's definition of language. "Language," said the great Frenchman, "is a system invented by men for the purpose of concealing their thoughts." But, fraught as our foreign affairs are with difficulty and danger, they are lost sight of as we begin to realize the fearful extent of the dreadful calamity which swept from the face of earth, Galveston, the beautiful queen of the gulf of Mexico, which seemed certain, in a few years to become the great commercial depot of the extreme southern states, and point from which Europe was eventually to derive her imports of cotton, lumber, corn, sugar, tobacco and other articles of export which Europe so needs and the south raises in such abundance. Only a few hours before the destroying angel passed over her happy homes, no more prosperous city could be found in all the south. Peace, plenty and happiness was the rule, poverty and misery the exception. The citizens, happy and content, sat outside their homes, having a friendly chat with their neighbors, with no thought of coming danger. Suddenly the wind begin to rise, and every moment in increased in volume, and those that were sitting on their doorsteps, or were talking with their neighbors while standing on the street, found it convenient to seek shelter in their homes to avoid the fury of the storm. Wherever the piercing blast struck sharp gables, or collections of telegraph wires, it awakened uncanny noises; it shrieked and howled in frightful and inharmonious discord that heralded the wrath to come. Out in the gulf the storm, in its mad fury, had lashed the seething waters into a milk-white foam, which it caught up and lifted to the clouds and then, with the wild cry of a thousand furies, leaped forward and dashed a mighty wave on the devoted city. The fiends had triumphed; under the boiling whirlpool were buried thousands of dead, who will answer no reveille till the archangel's trump.

When the news of this terrible disaster first reached us the dead were reckoned by hundreds and the financial loss by hundreds of thousands. By noon of the next day the death roll was fearfully multiplied. Thousands of hearthstones were desolated and the poll of the dead was so vast that the enumerators in despair, gave up the counting.

The island on which Galveston stands is but a few feet above the level of the ocean which surrounds it, and the destroying wave which swept over it buried the city many feet beneath the seething waters. Houses collapsed on every side, burying the dwellers beneath the ruins, shrieks of despair and cries for aid were heard on every hand. But they fell on the ears of those who were themselves in deadly peril and facing certain death, which quickly came to their relief. How many perished in that terrible storm will probably never be known.

But from out of the sorrow and gloom of this sad story comes a bright streak of hope and light and charity. Prone to evil as the sparks fly upward, this is not such a bad world after all. No sooner had the telegraph announced the dread story of destruction than clubs were formed, money, medicines and provisions filling railroad trains and steamships were hurrying to the scene of destruction. Whatever mortal man could do to aid the suffering or help the needy was done in that broad and generous manner the knowledge of which honors humanity, no matter what its creed, complexion or degree.

The question which is now under consideration in the great commercial city of Texas, is whether a new Galveston shall rise over the ashes of the old. It would seem like tempting Providence to raise a new city over the dead memories of the past, and yet it might be well to remember that trite old adage that lightning seldom strikes twice in the same place and calamities like that which swept Galveston from the face of the earth only occur once or twice in a thousand years. Of one thing Texas must rest assured, that aid will not be refused as long as it will be needed. And whether they build on the ruins or seek another site for the new Galveston, they will have the Godspeeds of their fellow-countrymen and the right hand of fellowship.

The week which has just past has been marked by three or four eventful and phenomenal tragedies. Scarcely two weeks ago a man and woman took a room at a prominent hotel on Broadway. In the morning the chambermaid knocked at the door. Receiving no reply she informed the landlord; the door was opened; the woman lay dead on the bed and the man dead on the floor. It seemed as if it might be a nine days' wonder; the man proved to be the never-do-well son of one of the most fashionable ladies in the land, but as for the woman—God help her—let her rest. New York has many sins to answer for. She would have her hands full and her character smirched had she nothing to do expect to take care of her own wicked family. But in all the great sensational crimes which furnish our large newspapers with their daily bread the principal actors come from the country and the city has to answer for their sins. Last week a suicide and almost a murder took place at a small hotel in Brooklyn, which would have furnished Ibsen with a foundation of another story which like those in the last few seasons have turned the heads of the playgoers of London. The characters in this sorrowful play—one is the son of a reputable clergyman and the other a beautiful young woman not unlike thousands of others who form the flotsam and jetsam of our city life. The two characters are photographed in one half of our yellow literature. They begin in innocence, in due time they reach crime and in the fifth act the curtain rings down on death.

The woman in the case is young, beautiful, intelligent, educated up to the highest point of her intellectual ability, who has a keen sense of right and wrong who, in her last moments, facing death with a calmness, and resolution of a stoic, with the positive evidence of impurity upon her, in her dying moments seems to prize her purity of character more than she laments her approaching death.

In her first appearance on any stage we find her as the child of a poor mother who feels unable to support her offspring. Of her father we know nothing; he might have died, or he might have deserted her but this much we know—the mother succeeded in finding a rich lady with no daughter of her own, although she was the mother of several sons, who took the child to her heart, reared her and loved her as if she were indeed her own; gave her the best education that money could procure. In time she became an accomplished musician and was loved by all who knew her.

As the years of her girlhood rolled swiftly by, at twenty years of age, she was one of the most pronounced and accomplished beauties of the set in which she moved. When at the age of sixteen she met the man who this week attempted suicide for her sake. The whole story surpasses the wildest sensation of the week.

Consider these three pictures. The story as told by the survivor is as follows: They are each desperately in love with each other, and for no apparent reason they agree to die together; a six-shooter and a bottle of carbolic acid are depended on to perfect the work. The revolver is expected to accomplish the assassination and suicide, but should the six-shooter fail the acid is relied on to finish the business.

It is arranged that the young man should do the shooting. He was to shoot the young woman first, and then, without the least possible delay, to kill himself. To make sure that nothing should impede the bullet's course, the young woman removes her corsets, the lover places the pistol against the breast of his beloved and fires, but does not kill her. He then places the muzzle of the pistol in his own mouth and fires. The last shot is a success and the world has one fool less to answer for. The woman, feeling that she is not dead, dresses herself, makes a B line for her home not many blocks away, goes straight to bed. When finding the pain intolerable she informs her friends, the family physician is immediately summoned, the woman removed to the hospital, where she lies awaiting the return of health or a coroner's inquest.

We are sadly rattled in our politics. Each of the leaders believes that he will succeed. New York is the pivotal state. Boss Croker is in the saddle and there he proposes to stick until the November ides.

LETTER FROM OLD LAND.

A. H. ST. GERMAIN TELLS OF HIS TRAVELS.

Experienced Great Difficulty in Getting Steamship Accommodation—The Great Heat in England—Visit to Scotland—Has Gone to France.

London, England, Sept. 11.—(To the Editor): According to promise I send you this letter from abroad, recording some of the places I have seen since I left Canada on May 15th last.

On arriving in Montreal I applied at the different steamship offices for the purpose of securing a passage on some one of the steamships sailing from that port for England, Scotland or Ireland, but found, to my disappointment, that the passages on all the Canadian steamers had been secured several weeks in advance; and, on visiting St. John, N. B., New York, Boston, etc., a similar disappointment awaited me. Thousands of christian endeavour delegates, wishing to be present at their annual convention (held in London this year) and a large number of delegates from America to the convention of the women's christian temperance union, held in Edinburgh in July last, the usual trans-Atlantic tourist travellers, and the Paris exposition passengers, taxed to the utmost the capacity of every steamship leaving American and Canadian ports for weeks, their agents trying to accommodate the rush of travellers striving to reach the other side of the big pond.

It was not until the 11th of July last that I secured a passage to start off on my European tour, after waiting patiently for my chance to come. In the meantime I was improving the opportunity by visiting the principal Canadian and American cities, until an opportunity would offer to secure accommodation on some ship. The Saxonia was advertised to sail from Boston on July 14th, and I concluded to forthwith hurry off to Boston and see what would be my luck there. On my arrival my application at the Cunard line steamship office proved successful, in consequence of one of the passengers (who had secured a stateroom for himself and wife) not being able to sail on the day the ship was to leave; otherwise I would not have secured passage even at the the eleventh hour, for every available berth on the Saxonia had been secured weeks before she sailed, notwithstanding she has accommodation for from 300 to 400 first and second class passengers, and, in her ordinary work across the Atlantic will also carry 1,800 third class passengers.

The passage across was really very pleasant, six days of perfect calm, and then a storm came up, which nearly every one on board enjoyed, for the ship was of such large dimensions that she ploughed through the waves with scarcely a motion. We reached Queenstown, Ireland, in eight days, and very pleasing the Irish coast appeared after so much ocean. After a twenty hours sail we were landed at Liverpool, and came right on to London by rail.

England this year has been visited (as have other countries, not excepting Canada), by waves of heat that the oldest inhabitant does not remember having experienced before; nevertheless I hurriedly got through "sight-seeing" in London, so as to get over into "Bonnie Scotland," to obtain a glimpse of our revered queen at Balmoral. On our way up to the extreme north end of Scotland, we spent nearly a week in the beautiful and historic city of Edinburgh, and from there went on through Glasgow, Perth, Sterling, Inverness, Wisk and Thurso, stopping a day or two in each place to see the sights.

The scenery up through the Highlands is particularly fine, and the shire of Caithness is rendered striking by the almost total absence of wood. This is the more remarkable as the county would seem, at one period, to have been almost a complete forest. It contains a vast deal of moor or peat-moss, the well-known product of decayed vegetable matter, and, in cutting for fuel, trunks of trees have been very frequently found with the bark quite entire. An anecdote is told of an American who visited Caithness some years ago. In his progress through he continually ejaculated, "Beautiful country! very beautiful country!" Some one remarked to him that it could hardly be called a beautiful country from its want of trees. "Trees!" cried the Yankee, "all stuff; Caithness, I calculate, is the finest clearance I ever saw in my life!" Owing to this lack of wood the houses are built of stone with thatched roofs, and very quaint and comfortable some of them are. The sea coast, which is generally lofty and rugged, presents scenery of the grandest description. The game preserves are enormous, some of the dukes, lords and earls having over 100,000 acres exclusively for hunting purposes, locked up from industrial uses.

On our return to London the week before last, we took a run into Surrey, and spent ten days pleasantly with a relative, visiting in the two ancient towns of Farnham and Aldershot. It is here, a mile and a half south of Farnham, where Waverley abbey lies, in the most perfect surroundings for a ruin. It is by far the most extensive of the three abbeys possessed by Surrey. The White monks, or Cistercians, who came to Waverley abbey in 1128, evidently had an eye for scenery, for they chose an almost ideal spot for their home. William Giffard, bishop of Winchester, who founded the abbey in 1128, brought twelve monks from the abbey of Elemosyna in Normandy, to start a new settlement. It was here in Farnham, too, where William Cobbett was born in the year 1762. He was the author of "Cobbett's Grammar," a political writer of his time, a common soldier, serving in his regiment in Canada, and, after his discharge, becoming a member of parliament. In Farnham, on the 4th of November, 1740, the Rev. Augustus Toplady was born. It will be remembered he was the author of that almost universally known hymn, "Rock of Ages." The strongest interest in quaint old Farnham is the castle, the walls of which, being of enormous thickness, betray its ancient origin. The earliest records concerning this spot are right back in the shadowy pre-Norman years, when, in 860, Ethelbald, king of the West Saxons, granted Farnham castle to the bishops of Swithun and the congregation of the church of Winton.

I leave London for France this week, and you may hear from me again before my return to Canada.

WOMEN ARE TIPPLERS.

Women Are Drinking More, Men Are Drinking Less.

New Haven, Conn., Sept. 22.—"Men of good social position drink less now than formerly, but the women of high society are becoming tipplers, and increasingly so. They are imitating the evils of English society, and staid old American notions of respectability are on the wane."

Such was the burden of an address by the Rev. Father Walter J. Shanley, of the cathedral parish, in Hartford, who presided over the thirty-first annual convention of the Connecticut Catholic total abstinence union.

There were about one hundred delegates and hundreds of visitors in Saint Aloysius hall. Pausing in the delivery of his address, Father Shanley said slowly and distinctly so that none in the hall might misapprehend:

"Considerable comment has been made lately concerning the drink habit among society women, and the danger of the custom growing among other women.

"According to competent authority, drinking is decreasing among men, but increasing among women, and among women of the wealthier classes.

"It is to be regretted that women who are leaders in society imitate the drinking customs of English society, and that the old American ideas of respectability in this matter are fast disappearing."

Because of the social prominence of Father Shanley in Hartford and his popularity in the state, his comment caused a sensation. He was re-elected president at the concluding session, and no attempt was made to controvert his sweeping statement.

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP.

And the Club Will Make Itself Felt in Politics.

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 22.—A large and enthusiastic meeting of members of the old Canadian-American club was held last night and radical action was taken in regard to the future. Heretofore only Canadian born residents have been admitted to membership, but in the future all British-American subjects will be eligible. One all important restriction is placed on this provision that every member, after a certain time, become a citizen of the United States and take an active part and interest in the political life of the country of his adoption. The dues have been reduced and new club rooms secured, and the club intends to make itself felt in politics in the future.

Health Preserved

Is, without doubt, the jewel of great price, and the one least valued. Disregard of symptoms that clearly indicate abnormal action of the liver, stomach or bowels is nothing less than criminal. Health through neglect too often vanishes like a "Will o' the Wisp," and the anxious seeker secures but pain and disappointment for his labor. No aid towards the preservation of health can surpass Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. These pills, being composed of vegetable substances, exert their regular action without the evil effects too often following the use of pills containing mercury. For all bilious disorders they will even prove a positive specific. Hamilton's Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine.

Cuba Elects Delegates.

Havana, Sept. 22.—Elections are being held here to-day for a constitutional convention and providing for the election of delegates. The delegates elected will meet in Havana on the first Monday in November. The convention is called in conformity with the spirit of the joint resolution of congress and a part of its duty will be to agree upon the relation of the United States and the government of Cuba. Havana province will send eight delegates to the convention; Santiago province, seven; Santa Clara province, seven; Matanzas province, four; Pinar del Rio province, three; and Puerto Principe province, two.

Paris' Greatest Banquet.

Paris, Sept. 22.—President Loubet's immense banquet will be held here this afternoon. Fifteen thousand guests, including mayors of all the towns in France, will sit down at the tables. Great tents are erected in the gardens of the Tuileries overlooking the Rue de Rivoli. The banquet will cost 500,000 francs. The president will make several addresses. To-night there will be a fete with splendid illuminations.

National Prison Association.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 22.—The national prison congress was opened here to-day. The meeting is one of the largest in the history of the association and is attended by most of the prominent prison authorities throughout the country. Among the questions to be discussed are the food problem in prisons, the recreation and privileges as aids to prison discipline, and corporal punishment.
