A BRITISH SOLDIER

Tells how Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills Conquer Disease.

Like the conquering armies of Britain, which are marching to victory in every quarter of the globe, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are everywhere triumphing over sickness, weakness and suffering, and freeing those who are bound by the shackles of disease.

Mr. David Walsh, of Carleton Place, Ont., a man who has served with distinction and credit in the British army, and is now an employee of the C. P. Railway, says, "While in the army I got broken down, and my nervous system was completely shattered.

"I was much troubled with livee complaint, loss of appetite, etc. My rest became broken and was disturbed by vivid dreams. This had been going on for 14 years, although I took a great many remedies to escape from the troubles which afflicted me.

"However, I got no relief until I started to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I used together with Laxa-Liver Pills, and now after having used a few boxes, I am better than I have been for years. My nerves are restored to full force and vigor, I eat and sleep well, and my entire system has been toned and strengthened."

JENNIE BAXTER: JOURNALIST

BY ROBERT BARR.

V.—The Prime Minister's Indiscretion.

[Copyright, 1900, by Robert Barr.]

True to her promise, the Princess von Steinheimer was waiting at the immense railway station of Vienna, and she received her friend with gushing effusion. Jennie left the train as neat as when she had entered it, for many women have the faculty of taking long journeys without showing the dishevelled effect which protracted railway traveling seems to have upon the masculine, and probably more careless, portion of humanity.

"Oh, you dear girl!" cried the princess. "You cannot tell how glad I am to see you. I was just yearning for some one to talk English to. I am so tired of French and German, although they flatter me by saying that I speak those two languages well; yet English is my own tongue, and it is so delightful to talk with one who can understand every blessed word you say, which you can easily see those who pretend to speak English in Vienna do not. What long chats we shall have! And now come this way to the carriage. There is a man here to look after your luggage. You are coming right home with me and are going to stay with me as long as you are in Vienna. Don't say 'no,' nor make any excuse, nor talk of going to a hotel, for a suit of rooms is all ready for you, and your luggage will be there before we are. Now let us enter the carriage, for I am just pining to hear what it is you have on hand; some delicious scandal, I hope."

"No," answered Jennie; "it pertains to government matters."

"Oh, dear!" cried the princess. "How tiresome! Politics is so dull."

"I don't think this case is dull," said Jennie, "because it has brought Austria and England to the verge of war."

"What a dreadful idea! I hadn't heard anything of it. When did this happen?"

"Less than a month ago." And Jennie related the whole circumstance giving a synopsis of the premier's speech.

"But I see nothing in that speech to cause war," protested the princess. "It is as mild as new milk."

"I don't pretend to understand diplomacy," continued Jennie, blushing slightly as she remembered Lord Donal, and it seemed that the same thought struck the princess at the same moment, for she looked quizzically at Jennie and burst out into a laugh.

"You may laugh, but I tell you that this is a serious business. They say it only needed a second 'new milk' speech from the premier to have England answer most politely in words of honey, and next instant the two countries would have been at each other's throat."

"Suppose we write to Lord Donal in St. Petersburg," suggested the princess, still laughing, "and ask him to come to Vienna and help us? He understands all about diplomacy. By the way, Jennie, did Lord Donal ever find out whom he met at the ball that night?"

"No, he didn't," answered Jennie shortly.

"Don't you ever intend to let him know? Are you going to leave the romance unfinished, like one of Henry James' novels?"

"It isn't a romance. It is simply a very distressing incident which I have been trying to forget ever since. It is all very well for you to laugh, but if you ever mention the subject again I'll leave you and go to a hotel."

"Oh, no, you won't!" chirruped the princess brightly. "You daren't. You know I am the goddess of the machine. At any time I can send a letter to Lord Donal and set the poor young man's mind at rest. So, you see, Miss Jennie, you will have to talk very sweetly and politely to me and not make any threats, because I am like those dreadful persons in the sensational plays who hold the guilty secrets of other people and blackmail them. But you are a nice girl, and I won't say anything you don't want to hear said. Now, what is it you wish to find out about this political crisis?"

"I want to discover why the premier did not follow up his speech with another. He must have known when he spoke how his words would be taken in England. Therefore it is thought that he had some plans which unforeseen circumstances intervening have nullified. I want to know what those unforeseen circumstances were. For the past fortnight The Daily Bugle has had two men here in Vienna trying to throw some light on the dark recesses of diplomacy. Up to date they have failed, but at any moment they may succeed. It was because they failed that I am sent here. Now, have you anything to suggest, Madame la Princesse?"

"I suggest, Jennie, that we put our heads together and learn all that those clever diplomatists wish to hide. Have you no plans yourself?"

"I have no very definite plan, but I have a general scheme. These men I spoke of are trying to discover what other men are endeavoring to conceal. All the officials are on their guard. They are highly placed and are not likely to be got at by bribery. They are clever, alert men of the world, so hoodwinking them is out of the question; therefore, I think, my two fellow journalists have a difficult task before them."

"But it is the same task that you have before you. Why is it not as difficult for you, Jennie, as for them?"

"Because I propose to work with people who are not on their guard, and there is where you can help me, if you are not shocked at my proposal. Each official has a wife, or at least most of them have. Some of these wives, in all probability, possess the information that we would like to get. Women will talk more freely with women than men will with men. Now, I propose to leave the officials severely alone and to interview the wives."

The princess clapped her hands.

"Excellent," she cried. "The women of Vienna are the greatest gossips you ever heard chattering together. I have never taken any interest in politics, otherwise I suppose I might have become possessed of some important government secrets. Now, Jennie, I'll tell you what I propose doing. I shall give a formal tea next Thursday afternoon. I shall invite to that tea a dozen or two dozen or three dozen wives of high placed officials about the court. My husband will like that, because he is always complaining that I do not pay enough attention to the ladies of the political circle of Vienna. He takes a great interest in politics, you know. If we discover nothing at the first tea meeting, we will have another and another and another until we do. We are sure to invite the right woman on one occasion or another, and when we find her I'll warrant the secret will soon belong to us. Ah, here we are at home, and we will postpone the discussion of our plans until you have had something to eat and are rested a bit."

The carriage drew up at the magnificent palace, well known in Vienna, which belonged to the Prince von Steinheimer, and shortly afterward Jennie Baxter found herself in possession of the finest suit of rooms she had ever beheld in her life. Jennie laughed as she looked around her rooms and noted their luxurious appointments.

"These are not exactly what we should call 'diggings' in London, are they?" she said to the princess, who stood by her side, delighted at the pleasure of her friend. "We often read of poor penny-a-liners in their garrets, but I don't think any penny-a-liner ever had such a garret as this placed at his disposal."

"I knew you would like the rooms," cried the princess gayly. "I like them myself, and I hope they will help to induce you to stay in Vienna as long as you can. I have given you my own maid, Gretlich, and I assure you it isn't every friend I would lend her to. She is a model servant."

"Oh, but you mustn't do that!" said Jennie. "I cannot rob you of your maid and also be selfish enough to monopolize these rooms."

"You are not robbing me. In fact, I am perhaps a little artful in giving you Gretlich, for she is down in the dumps this last week or two, and I don't know what in the world is the matter with her. I suspect it is some love affair, but she will say nothing, although I have asked her time and again what is the trouble. Now, you are such a cheerful, consoling young woman that I thought if Gretlich were in your service for a time she might brighten up and be her own self again. So, you see, instead of robbing me, I am really taking advantage of your good nature."

"I am afraid you are just saying that to make it easier for me to be selfish; still, you are so generous, princess, that I am not going to object to anything you do, but just give myself up to luxury while I stay in Vienna."

"That is right. Ah, here is Gretlich. Now, Gretlich, I want you to help make Miss Baxter's stay here so pleasant that she will never want to leave us."

"I shall do my best, your highness," said the girl, with quiet deference.

Death In The Blood.

The essential requisites for a sound body and clear mind are few, for, given a liver that will properly perform its functions, and a stomach with tone and vigor unimpaired, and good health is assured. To retain so desirable blessing resort should occasionally be made to Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut. They stimulate the liver into healthy action, give tone to the blood by expelling all poisonous germs, and thereby remove death from the blood. Hamilton's Pills are purely vegetable. Sold by dealers everywhere.

Toronto's Supply Running Out.

Toronto, Sept. 26.—The press despatches about the big strike in Pennsylvania seem to be much more rosy than the facts warrant. The coal dealers here received private advices this afternoon from the coal fields, stating that things look very dark and that supplies are running out very rapidly. The price here is still six dollars a ton, but another increase is expected in a few days.

WERE WEDDED AT NAPANEE

TWO OF THE TOWN'S POPULAR YOUNG PEOPLE WED.

Another Napanee Girl Married at Bowmanville — Left For San Francisco — Entertained Young Friends.

Napanee, Sept. 26.—A very pretty wedding was solemnized in the Western Methodist church last night at 7.30 p.m., the contracting parties being Frank C. Anderson and Miss Lottie M. Allen, eldest daughter of R. R. Allen. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. I. Allen. The church was handsomely decorated with flowers and potted plants. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Anderson took the 8.26 train for the west. The bride and groom are two of Napanee's best known young people, and their host of friends wish them a very happy and prosperous journey through life. The bride received numerous handsome gifts from friends. The choir of the Western church, of which Mrs. Anderson was a valued member for the last ten years, presented her with a handsome rocking chair as their token of remembrance.

Miss Nettie Sherrin, so well known in Napanee, was married in Bowmanville last Wednesday to G. W. Thexton, also well-known here. Mr. and Mrs. Thexton will reside at Rodney, Ont., where Mr. Thexton has a thriving newspaper business.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Wallbridge, Desoronto, and Mrs. Nicol, their daughter, and her two children, left yesterday for San Francisco, Cal., where they will reside. Mr. Nicol went west some time ago for his health and has improved very much and now has a very successful business in San Francisco.

Alfred Burrows arrived home Monday from a two months' survey for the government in New Ontario. Blanche Grieve returned to Toronto on Tuesday after spending her vacation with her parents, T. S. Hill, manager of the Dominion bank, and Mrs. Hill, returned yesterday from a vacation in New York and other points.

Miss Florence Henry gave a delightful party last evening to a number of her friends. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gilpin and daughter, Maggie, left yesterday for their home in Cheyboygan after a very pleasant visit with friends in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Cline, Richmond, are rejoicing over the arrival of a bouncing nine-pound baby girl to their home on Saturday last. Mrs. D. Henwood still continues very ill.

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.

Caused Heavy Damage at Cement Works at Marlbank.

Tweed, Sept. 26.—The works of the Canadian Portland cement company, located at Marlbank, about sixteen miles from here, were almost entirely destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The fire started about eight o'clock, caused by the spontaneous combustion of coal gas, and spread with lightning rapidity so that inside of an hour the mammoth works were in ashes. The only portions of the plant that remains standing is the kiln house, a stone structure, the other buildings being of frame. The machinery in this apartment was only slightly damaged, but all the rest was almost completely ruined. The total loss on buildings and machinery is estimate at $60,000, but it is fully covered by insurance. The plant was formerly the property of the Beaver Portland cement company, of Montreal, but, in May last, was taken over by the Canadian Portland cement company. It had a capacity of 500 barrels per day and employed about 150 men. The rebuilding of the works will proceed at once and it is expected that they will be in operation again in the course of about three months.

Good Season Promised.

If the enquiries already received by the Grand Trunk railway can be taken as a criterion the woods in the Highlands of Ontario will this year be the mecca for nimrods from all over the United States and Europe as well as Canada. The season for moose will open November 1st, and continue until Nov. 15th. This is the first time in five years that an open season has been declared on moose, and at its close there will not be any lawful shooting until 1903. The game is said to be plentiful. The deer season will open on the same date with moose. The season for partridge started Sept. 15th, and will continue until Dec. 15th.

Excursion To New York,

Via N.Y.C. & H.R.RR. on Tuesday, Oct. 9th, only $7.50 return. Steamer will leave Kingston at 5 a.m. and 5.30 p.m., connecting at Cape Vincent with through excursion trains without change. Buffet (dining) parlor car will be run from Cape Vincent on morning train and the finest up-to-date sleeping cars on night trains. Rates, parlor chair, $1.50, berths, $2 each, stateroom $7. For full particulars apply to Fred. A. Folger, foot of Brock street, Kingston.

Put On The "Index."

London, Sept. 26.—The Italian press has a good deal to say about Marie Corelli's novel, "The Master Christian." What all the papers say is that no author ever displayed greater ignorance of the vatican and of the eternal city. The Vatican journals themselves observe a discreet silence on the subject, but the cardinals, who compose the congregation of the Index, have decided to put the book in the Index, so that it is now a sin for any Catholic to read it.

Arnprior Contracts.

Arnprior, Sept. 26.—S. R. Rudd, Arnprior, is to build the water works pump-house, his price being $3,989. John Macdougall & Co., Montreal, build the steel storage tank, and also supply pumping machinery and filter for $17,453. The earth excavation and pipe laying will be done by Clark & Connelly at $23,520.

Fell On Him And Killed Him.

Tilsonburg, Ont., Sept. 26.—Albert Brown, farm laborer, employed near Mount Elgin, was engaged in lifting stones out of a waggon, when he lost his balance and fell to the ground. The stone he was lifting fell upon him and killed him.
