A BRITISH SOLDIER

Tells how Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills Conquer Disease.

Like the conquering armies of Britain, which are marching to victory in every quarter of the globe, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are everywhere triumphing over sickness, weakness and suffering, and freeing those who are bound by the shackles of disease.

Mr. David Walsh, of Carleton Place, Ont., a man who has served with distinction and credit in the British army, and is now an employee of the C. P. Railway, says, "While in the army I got broken down, and my nervous system was completely shattered.

"I was much troubled with liver complaint, loss of appetite, etc. My rest became broken and was disturbed by vivid dreams. This had been going on for 14 years, although I took a great many remedies to escape from the troubles which afflicted me.

"However, I got no relief until I started to take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I used together with Laxa-Liver Pills, and now after having used a few boxes, I am better than I have been for years. My nerves are restored to full force and vigor, I eat and sleep well, and my entire system has been toned and strengthened."

ANOTHER LONDON LETTER.

REV. DR. PARKER IS HEARD BY GREAT CROWDS.

Institute of Journalists—Britain Acknowledges Benefits of American Newspaperdom—Delightful Inconsistencies in London—Something About the Theatres.

London, Eng., Sept. 22.—At the point where the Strand becomes Fleet street, the regularity of the road is somewhat disturbed by a fine pile of gray stone buildings on the right. In the crowd of pedestrians becoming broken and distributed about St. Clement's church, which stands in the middle of the street, the sudden accession in considerable numbers of the keen, refined, legal face is noticeable. Occasionally one may see a figure in gown and grey wig passing between the buildings. This is the quarter extending from Fleet street north to Holborn, where English law, "broadening slowly down from precedent to precedent," may be said to be at home. The various "Inns" are grouped about the Royal courts of justice. It was in Lincoln's Inn that I heard on Monday last the presidential address of the institute of journalists, which held its twelfth annual conference there by invitation of the benchers. The entrance is from Chancery Lane, through a modest iron gateway. Here in the centre of the universal scramble the law holds in its iron grasp a space of green grass and walks of almost ecclesiastical quiet, where dignified architecture all about shuts out the never-ending trot of the horses' feet and the unconsidered jumble of street colorings. From a high flight of stone steps you enter the hall, which is small but handsome, its walls sharing in the lavish London distribution of fine portraits and paintings.

Sir James Henderson, a Belfast editor and president of the institute of journalists, is, like his confreres, not an imposing person in appearance. He is rather stout, rather bald, wore a grey coat, and a kindly Irish brogue fell from his lips. His address on "The Evolution of the Newspaper, a Century of Progress," was a working address and did not attempt to be striking. One point in it that drew forth hearty expressions of sympathy from the audience was the president's regret, while acknowledging freely the benefits newspaperdom owes to America in such forms as the linotype press, concerning the present tendency to American sensationalism, it was, he said, not in accordance with the dignity of the British press, and the Briton is a little tender about his dignity. The conference is mainly a business one and dealt with such technicalities as the copyright of news. One point of interest, however, to journalists everywhere, was a warm discussion on fixing an educational standard of admission to the ranks, which resulted in instructions to a committee to draw up a form of examination. It was warmly asserted by the opposition that journalists are born, not made. It must be obvious, however, and must appeal especially to all who care to preserve undefiled the well of pure English, that an examination in spelling and grammar could not nowadays be much of an obstacle to a man who desires to live by his pen. The Americans, with their recognized schools of journalism, are as usual ahead in this matter also.

Of the two special sermons preached for the institute of journalists last Sunday, I chose Dr. Parker's at the City Temple in preference to canon Scott Holland's at St. Paul's, for the reason that I had heard the former before, and wishes to see more of a man who after a ministry of twenty-seven years still fills to overflowing this immense church twice every Sunday. The City Temple lies in Holborn Viaduct, one of the main bus routes, in a line with rows of shops and is entered directly from the pavement. It is an old church, founded by Oliver Cromwell's own chaplain. A guard of policemen was at the door. The audience was composed of two classes, the pew-holders, well-to-do, if not the most intellectual or cultivated among non-conformist circles, and a crowd composed of visitors to the city and the usual drifters and sensation seekers.

Dr. Parker comes in quietly and I did not notice him until he was already seated in the wide pulpit. His features, irregular, and of a somewhat heavy type and his long, grey hair are familiar through photographs. He wears a low turned-over collar and black bow tie, and the Geneva gown without the cassock, a careless and characteristic compromise in dress between bare nonconformity and strict conventionality. When he is not speaking he sits in the pulpit with his eyes closed, frequently passing the fingers of both hands over his forehead, and down the sides of his face, a somewhat self-conscious and not altogether pleasing action. At the beginning of the evening service in the City Temple, the whole congregation chants the general confession of the English prayer-book, after which Dr. Parker gives the invocation, a few words, striking and rolled out in the rich, deep hushed way that is Dr. Parker's method of using emotionalism. If I remember rightly last Sabbath evening, it was simply, "Descend, Immortal Dove! Take us on Thy wings and bear us far away above all earthly thoughts and desires. Amen." His text was: "The outward business of the house of God," and he gave a strong denial of the common separation of the secular and the sacred. All life, all business was sacred, he affirmed, if truly viewed. The sermon was punctuated with phrases that stay in the memory, as, "The crumbling walls of our dwellings leaning against the walls of the eternal," "When God goes He takes a lot with Him." It is this power of saying striking things in a striking way that I should say was Dr. Parker's strength. He is an original thinker and the permanence of his success must always command respect. I liked the music at the City Temple. The large choir and powerful organ are placed in the gallery above the minister. There are two cornets and six violins, four of which are played by ladies, and when that audience of some thousands breaks into a hymn it knows, with the organ and choir doing their best, the two cornets at full blast and those sober little English women fiddling madly, it is worth hearing, a fine and not unfavorable contrast to the almost heavenly beauty of the choral service at Westminster or St. Paul's. It lacks perhaps the rapt devotion of the Westminster choir's beautiful performance, but there is an ethical and religious value for many people not to be found in Westminster in the joyful shout of a great congregation in such words as those I heard sung last Sabbath:

"Christ comes to His temple,
We His word receiving
Are made happy in believing.
Lo, from sin delivered,
He hath turned our sadness,
Our deep gloom to light and gladness."

There are probably few places where one runs up against such delightful inconsistencies as in London. The Londoner, who is sensitive about his dignity at many points, blossoms out at others in quite the opposite direction. For example his busses in which he becomes an obliging public sandwichman for the manufacturers of whiskey, boot-blacking and hair-restorer. Tall hat, long coat and all, he clambers up aloft, holding on to somebody's whiskey, and sits down in the gay roof garden of advertisements, amiably adding a natural touch to somebody else's condensed milk or baking powder above which his unconscious dignity appears. The conductor, too, is a constant source of mild surprise. In a country of uniform he wears none. A rather undersized, shabby individual with a dirty hat, he is only distinguished from his passengers of the less dignified classes by a number on his breast and a pouch over his shoulder. He is unmoved even in the prolonged knockades of Fleet street, and cheerfully sees pedestrians leave him far behind. Only when a passenger approaches, is he in a hurry. He has seldom time to stop for a passenger either to get on or off. He will slow down, however, for as long as the would-be passenger has time to run beside his conveyance, saying an ascent and will stand on the lowest step to fish him up when he has so far succeeded as to get one foot on the step. Lastly, I do not know whether or not the conductor has any interest in the number of fares he takes, but if not he deserves commendation. At various points when the bus draws to the curb he gets off, stand in the middle of the pavement, waves his arms and loudly advertises what he can do for you like any street vendor, "Oxford Circus-Marble Arch," and so on. He keeps his eye on the passers-by and if one happens to glance at him encourages him by word and gesture to take a ride. In fact the London bus driver is like other unique institutions here, apparently only to be explained by time and study.

By a coincidence the managers at both the Prince of Wales and the Haymarket theatres are producing plays concerning Nell Gwyn and the court of Charles II. Both are good, both well staged and the lady of the title role in both cases more than usually gifted. "English Nell," at the Prince of Wales, is based upon Anthony Hope's novel "Simon Dale." Making a play out of a novel is seldom a source of strength to the play. As to plot "English Nell" is somewhat diffuse and lacks culmination. But its staging, it authors, the curious interest that has always attached to the time of which it treats and, more than any of these the wit, and vivacity of Miss Marie Tempest have made the play a great success. It has been said that Miss Tempest's performance of this part was "little short of genius." It would be interesting to know just how much of her success in this character she owes to her own vivacious personality and how much to the power of psychical metamorphosis. There is more, however, than vivacity and wit in Miss Tempest's Nell. She is strong and daring as Nell Gwyn must have been to play with big odds and hold big destinies in her hand. The play at the Haymarket is entirely different in conception, Nell's personal relation to Charles being quite in the back ground, and her love being centred untold throughout on the hero whose love story with the ward of lord Jeffries is the motive of the play. This play it seems has had a considerable run in America in different hands. Miss Julia Neilson's Nell is a more artistic and a loftier character than Miss Tempest's, but one is apt to fancy that just on account of this Miss Tempest may be truer to the prototype. There is a touch of boyishness too about Miss Neilson's conception which I fancy is a mistake. Characters like Nell Gwyn are not common and it would be safe to assume as Miss Tempest does that Nell, although lacking in refinement to the end of her days would be possessed of a native grace of manner. Miss Neilson gives her the refinement without the grace. Her grace of physique, however, and her beautiful voice regained. Miss Neilson's support was excellent. The character of Charles, gracious, imperious, cynical, sad, careless, impulsive, profligate, suits Frederick Terry much better than that of squire Thornhill, which he was playing to his sister Miss Ellen Terry's "Olivia," earlier in the summer. Although there is little action in this part in this part he plays with distinction, and makes his Charles nearly, if not quite the leading character.

As I came away from the Haymarket, musing on the glittering, swirling days of the king who "never said a foolish thing, and never did a wise one," I passed the national gallery. With a sudden thought I turned in at the gate, pushed my umbrella across the counter to the time-honored confiscator of umbrellas and ran up to the top flat where in a little gallery by themselves that gay company still held court. There are two portraits of Charles, one as a young man with a grave air, and living brown eyes. Removed a little way from him is his queen, Catherine of Braganza, a pathetic figure, but close beside him audacious as in life, is Nell, sitting very straight with a white dress, with short curls all over her head like a boy, and gay smiling lips. There is Louise de Querouaillo and the lovely lady Castlemaine, beautiful but addle-pated Monmouth, the incorruptible Pepys, the poetic Rochester. Here among the people who had lived the brilliant but rotten comedy there was a peculiar realization of its futility, its warning and its charm.—J.S.C.

Japanese Catarrh Cure Cures.

R. E. Fleming, the well-known and popular Toronto representative, of Messrs. Ewing & Sons, cork manufacturers, Montreal, writes: "I have been a constant sufferer from catarrh of a severe and most disagreeable type for eight years, which became worse every winter, in spite of the hundreds of dollars I spent with catarrh specialists and many remedies, which only afforded temporary relief. I tried Japanese Catarrh Cure about a year ago, and since completing this treatment have not felt the least symptom of my former trouble. A few months ago I recommended it to a friend similarly affected, and he is now completely cured also. I can highly recommend it to any person troubled with this most annoying disease."

Japanese Catarrh Cure relieves cold in the head in one minute, and is absolutely guaranteed to cure any case of catarrh of the nose or throat. Sold by all druggists. Price, 50c. A free sample will be sent to any person troubled with catarrh. Enclose 5c. stamp. Address The Griffiths & Macpherson Co., Limited, 121 Church St., Toronto.

L. W. KNAPP, M.D.

How any man may quickly cure himself after years of suffering from sexual weakness, lost vitality, tight losses, varicocele, etc., and enlarge small, weak organs to full size and vigor. Simply send your name and address to Dr. L. W. Knapp, 2062 Hull Bldg., Detroit, Mich., and he will gladly send the free receipt with full directions, so that any man may easily cure himself at home. This is certainly a most generous offer, and the following extracts taken from his daily mail show what men think of his generosity:

"Dear Sir—Please accept my sincere thanks for yours of recent date. I have given your treatment a thorough test and the benefit has been extraordinary. It has completely braced me up. I am just as vigorous as a boy, and you cannot realize how happy I am."

"Dear Sir—Your method worked beautifully. Results were exactly what I needed. Strength and vigor completely returned and enlargement entirely satisfactory."

"Dear Sir—Yours was received. I had no trouble in making use of receipt as directed and can truthfully say it is a boon to weak men. I am greatly improved in size, strength and vigor."

All correspondence is strictly confidential, mailed in plain, sealed envelope. The receipt is free for the asking and he wants every man to try it.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

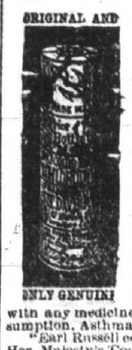
ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE



THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE

CHLORODYNE is admitted by the profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.

CHLORODYNE effectually checks and arrests those too often fatal diseases: Diphtheria, Fever, Croup, Ague.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentery.

CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation and Spasms.

CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, Meningitis, etc.

ONLY GENUINE

From W. Vesallus, Pettigrew, M.D., formerly Lecturer at St. George's Hospital, London—"I have no hesitation in stating that I have never met with any medicine so efficacious as an Anti-spasmodic and Sedative. I have used it in consumption, Asthma, Diarrhœa, and other diseases; and am perfectly satisfied with the result."

"Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians that he received a despatch from Her Majesty's Council at Manila to the effect that cholera has been raging fearfully, and the only REMEDY of any service was CHLORODYNE.—See Lancet, 1st December, 1864.

CAUTION—BEWARE OF PIRACY AND IMITATIONS.

CAUTION—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the inventor of CHLORODYNE; that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, which he regretted to say had been sworn to.—See Times, July 13th, 1864.

Sold in bottles at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s each. None is genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne" on the Government Stamp. Overwhelming Medical Testimony accompanies each bottle.

ASK FOR Labatt's (LONDON) Porter

Undoubtedly the best brewed on the continent. Proved to be so by analysis of four chemists, and by awards at the world's great Exhibitions, especially Chicago 1893, where it received ninety-six points out of a possible hundred, much higher than any other Porter in the United States or Canada.

J. McPARLAND, Agent, Kingston.

Superb Millinery.

Although the Ladies of Kingston have always been lavish in their praise of Crumley's Millinery, our swell creations have never scored the triumph they have this season. If ever perfect Millinery styles were created they are here for you to select from this autumn. If you attended the openings we know the opinions you entertain. In fact nearly every lady that visited our department was kind enough to say that she had never seen a display of Millinery that could be compared with this Autumn Showing.

Ladies' Ready-made Coats.

We are positive our styles are correct. It becomes more apparent every day that we are showing the popular ideas in Women's Coats at popular prices.
