An interesting struggle is going on in Ecuador between the friars and the authorities. The friars have made two attempts during the last two years to overthrow the present government. Orders have, therefore, been issued that they must not meddle with politics in future. Of course they had applied to the vatican for help, and meanwhile threaten to close the churches and withhold the sacraments.

The advance of Protestantism in Portugal seems to continue. The Y.M.C.A. is very active in the north. A branch of it is said to have originated in the very heart of a socialistic club, to the surprise of christians, and the indignation of the priests. So strong is the popular interest in evangelical religion that several of the newspapers regularly insert notices of Protestant meetings. The government, too, is exerting itself for the improvement of the public morals.

"It used to be thought that the sons of clergymen were apt to be worthless 'ne'er-do-weels,' and there were statistics for that," says Joseph Dana Miller, in the Saturday Evening Post. "But De Candale, the distinguished savant, says that the sons of ministers have contributed to science more eminent men than any other class. He might have added, too, that they have also swelled the ranks of the poets, theologians, and not a few of the military heroes of the past."

The terrible famine in India has practically ended, and in the summing up it is discovered that America has contributed $1,000,000; Britain, $1,700,000; the government of India, $65,000,000; Germany and other christian lands, varying sums; but with the exception of a few native princes who gave largely, the wealthy Hindus spent thousands of rupees in transporting sacred fish and alligators from a pond that was drying up to a river at some distance. This well illustrates the difference between christianity and heathenism.

When we went to China with the gospel, it was to stay and to conquer; and nothing has happened to change our purpose. We have met a stunning blow, great losses have come upon us, and a temporary check; but it is no crushing disaster. It is the Bull Run and the Fredericksburg of our campaign; the Wilderness, Richmond and Appomattox lie before us. And all the voices of earthly wisdom, and all the trumpets of the skies, and all the examples of christian history, and the blood of our martyred dead, summon us to these later and greater deeds, until the night is gone and China is won.—Dr. Smith, at meeting of American board.

Happy Are The Makers Of

Mats, Rugs and Carpets.

Diamond Dyes

Give Them Special Fast Colors For Cotton Goods.

The dyeing of cotton rags for the making of mats, rugs and carpets was for years a difficult and very unsatisfactory operation owing to the crude and common dyestuffs home dyers were obliged to use.

By the introduction of the special Diamond Dyes fast colors for cotton, the work of dyeing is now a source of pleasure and profit to every home.

The manufacturers of the famed Diamond Dyes prepare special cotton colors such as fast pink, fast orange, fast purple, fast garnet, fast navy, fast crimson, fast seal brown, fast yellow, fast scarlet, fast cardinal, fast Turkey red, fast dark green, fast black and other colors that are unfading in washing or when exposed to sun.

No other dyes in the world can give such marvellous and pleasing results on cotton goods. Ask your dealer for the Fast Diamond Dye Colors; take no other make.

BE READY FOR THE MARKET

OUR POULTRY AND DEMAND OF BRITISH MARKETS.

What Output of Canada is Likely Soon to Be—How Best to be Prepared to Make Money.

Our system of cold storage, both as regards the cold storage firms themselves and the cold storage cars for transportation, are making rapid strides toward perfection, and it will not be long before we have in Canada a cold storage system equal to anything in the world. At present there is nothing so much talked of or written about in the Canadian press as the necessity for perfection of the means of placing our perishable goods on the foreign or English market. Canada is becoming a great country. This is recognized by all. That the greatest revenue of this country must come through its agricultural sources is a point undisputed. The live question before the farmers then is which departments of their farms will yield them a quick and paying return? Undoubtedly, of all the comparatively undeveloped sources of agricultural wealth none will more surely fill the bill than poultry. The demand for superior quality on the English market is unlimited. The home market is rapidly increasing. A help to this development is the cold storage system of the department of agriculture and the furnishing of reliable instruction as to poultry culture from the experimental farm system and the commissioner of agriculture. But the most direct aid is in the shape of such large firms as the Canadian produce company Toronto, who buy the chickens from the farmers and do the fattening, packing, and shipping of the birds.

By means of private enterprise the expense of initiation and the risk of loss which inevitably attends the opening up of new enterprise will not come out of the pockets of the farmers. It may be that when the superior quality of our product is known and appreciated on the British market, and the prices established so that we will know what it is possible to get, that the time will be opportune for the individual farmer or association of farmers to fatten and ship for themselves. By that time our farmers should be well acquainted with methods of shipment to an already established market with guaranteed prices.

This year the poultry trade with Great Britain has developed as it never has before. As early as the middle of last month one firm has sent to England a shipment of Canadian chickens, which is five times larger than all shipments sent before from this country in any previous entire year. Next year there will be a demand for chickens unheard of before. The farmers for the present year, and probably for the next, should not try any direct shipment, but find out and send his chickens to the most reliable firms in this country. It may not pay the farmers to do the fattening, but it will certainly pay them to raise chickens to sell to the large firms who will do the fattening and shipping.

My services are at all times at the use of the farmers. It is my duty and pleasure to give full information as to the best breeds for the farmers to handle, how to rear and fatten the chickens, where and who best to sell them to, together with all such practical information as years of experimental work is calculated to make of value to farmers.

It is hoped by a series of letters, of which this is the first, to interest the farmers in a poultry department of their farms which will give them, surely and quickly in the near future, a revenue equal to any other branch of farming industry. All information as to breeds, care, feeding and fattening, etc., will be furnished free on application to my department, experimental farm, Ottawa.—A. G. GILBERT, manager poultry department.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL.

Its Closing Session—How it is to be Judged.

On Tuesday next the present Frontenac county council will convene for the last time. They have about completed their two years of service. Fate will decree that some of them shall not return to the council chamber as county representatives.

The council, which has for the past two years guided the destinies of Frontenac, is composed of men deeply interested in the welfare of the county. Politics had no play in the deliberations, and though the council was composed of six of each party, yet for two years in succession two liberals have occupied the warden's chair. The council was a most worthy one to act as the governing body of Frontenac during the closing two years of the nineteenth century. It would be a nice thing if they could be returned to open the new century, but that would be almost out of the question.

What is the council to be judged upon? There are really only two questions of great importance to the people of Frontenac—(1) the action taken regarding the defalcation by the late treasurer, and (2) the large amount of repairs done to the court house. Regarding the former, the council did all they considered possible when they referred the matter to the attorney-general, whose reply closed all proceedings. As to the extensive repairs to the court house no reasonable person in the county would object to what has been done. The offices in the building were in a pitiable state, and had to be renovated for decency's sake. Judges had continually drawn attention to the necessity of making the court room more respectable. The exterior of the building had been neglected for years, and now hundreds of dollars must be spent upon repairs which were commenced some time ago. For the improvements at the court house, the council is worthy of commendation, and their successors will no doubt see their way clear to continue the good work so well begun.

ODDEST DELUSION YET.

A Kingston Lunatic Who Thinks He's a Poached Egg.

New York Sun.

Kingston can boast of a good many things of which it is proud, but the latest it can make is a little bit eccentric. Of all the crazy men with queer delusions there is none to compare with that of an individual who is confined in the insane asylum in this city. He thinks he is a poached egg, and for twenty years he has been looking for a piece of toast big enough to sit down on. When visitors come and meet him he always approaches them with the request for a moment's conversation in private. As he is perfectly harmless the keepers do not put any restrictions upon him. If you grant his request he whispers in your ear:

"Have you got a piece of toast about you?"

"No," you say, "What is the matter with you? Are you hungry?"

"Hungry!" ejaculates the man "Why should I be hungry? I get plenty to eat, I'm tired. I'm a poached egg and I'm looking for a piece of toast to sit on."

Naturally this request leads to laughter, and the poached egg retires in high dudgeon, but he comes back regularly on the arrival of the next batch of visitors to see if he can't have luck. All sorts of things which look like toast have been supplied to the man, but he wants the real thing, and as chairs and couches are not make out of toasted bread he is obliged to go on making his perpetual plea to visitors. In all other respects the man seems normal, and if this crazy idea could only be got out of his head he might obtain his discharge. As he persists in his delusion he will probably spend the rest of his days in the asylum.

THEY RETURN HOME.

The Americans Who Went to the Aid of the Boers.

New York, Nov. 16.—On board the liner Furst Bismarck, which arrived at Hoboken last night were forty-four men of the Irish brigade and eight American scouts who fought under Col. Blake with the Boers in South Africa. The Irish brigade took part in the campaign around Ladysmith. "Long Tom," the Boer gun of history, the men who arrived last night said was manned from their brigade. The North German Lloyd steamer Trave, which arrived last morning, had on board thirty-four men of the Chicago Irish ambulance corps, which went to the Transvaal.

A CHURCH CRITICISM.

Bishops and Clergy Have Not Absolute Patronage.

A paper read at the annual conference of the Anglican archdeaconry of York, held at Barrie in September, now published by general request, is by Dr. J. George Hodgins, of educational reputation, and for a long time honorary secretary of the synod of Toronto. He has dived into history to good effect. He points out that never was a church so richly endowed, financially, as the Church of England in Upper Canada in 1781. Through the efforts of Gov. Simcoe and others, one-seventh of the crown lands was set apart for the future support of a Protestant clergy, and to endow parsonages or rectories. At that time there were only two Church of England clergymen in Upper Canada. The British government was solicitous for the maintenance of the church, because of appreciation of the devotion of united empire loyalists. The provisions of the act were not, however, carried generally into effect for forty-five years. In 1826 fifty-seven rectories were projected and patents issued to forty-four, which received on the average 400 acres each. Hitherto the stipends of the clergy were paid out of the public revenues and by grants from the S.P.G. in England. The establishment of these rectories was received with great disfavor and led to a prolonged agitation against efforts to establish the Church of England, aggravated by the attempt of the rectors to claim the whole of the land set apart for the support of "a Protestant clergy."

Meantime church activities were growing. In 1817 a bible and prayer book society was organized at York; in 1830 a Pioneer society; in 1832 a travelling mission fund society; in 1835 the Upper Canada clergy society. In 1838 a bishop was at last appointed for Upper Canada, Dr. Strachan, of Toronto. In 1840 he organized the church society of the diocese, composed of clergymen and laymen. This society was the only Church of England governing body in existence in the province until the formation of Toronto diocesan synod in 1853, and yet it was 1869 before the church society was merged into the synod and the right of appointment to rectories transferred. It had been placed with the church society by the legislature in 1852. Dr. Hodgins shows that when the right of appointment to rectories was transferred from the society to bishop Strachan, the inherent right of laymen to an equal voice with the clergy in such appointments was not extinguished. The bishop became representative agent of the lay as well as clerical members, and has no ecclesiastical or official right in himself to make an appointment. Therefore, the bishops of Huron and Ontario can have none.

Dr. Hodgins reviews at length the formation of the general synod and points out its inefficiency and practical failure in a way that must attract general attention. He contrasts its constitution with that of other general synods. Next he pays a great tribute to the woman's auxiliary and finally draws a pointed lesson from the figures of the census since 1839. The progress of the Church of England has not been worthy of its strength and intelligence. He urges revision of organizations and work, greater employment of the laity, and the holding of diocesan synods at different places each year to more deeply interest the laity.

Had He Been the Leader of a Strong Conservative Party.

Paris, Nov. 16.—Gen. Weyler, according to a Paris despatch, has granted the correspondent of the Figaro a long interview in course of which he is quoted as saying: "If I had been able to gather together a strong conservative party, after the death of Canovas, I should have prevented the loss of Cuba. At the head of the Spanish troops which were then in the island, I should have driven the Americans into the sea. The hasty levies of the Americans would have never been able to cope with the Spaniards."
