IN A TIGER'S MOUTH.

OUT OF THE JAWS OF DEATH WAS THIS MAN PLUCKED.

A Grewsome Encounter With One of Those Fierce and Daring Man Eating Brutes That Terrorize the People of India.

The most strictly accurate and graphic accounts of man eating tigers in India fail to convey an adequate sense of the awful terror which these terrible brutes inspire in the breasts of the unfortunate villagers, whom they haunt like evil demons. In ordinary cases the tiger or leopard attacks the village herds more or less openly, and the herdsmen, finding the enemy will, as a rule, retreat on being shout at or at with vigor, are not in bodily fear all the time, although I have known instances of the herdsman being killed by a tiger that he had presumed to interrupt while enjoying a meal from one of his cattle.

They become more dangerous when they have tasted the blood of their victim and are not readily disposed to give it up without a fight. I remember the case of a [illegible] in India, who, being told of a kill near his work, went to inspect it himself. The tiger, disturbed at his approach, rushed out of ambush at the party and in the scuffle that ensued the officer [illegible] for himself, tripped and fell into some jungle grass and bushes. The tiger satisfied, lay down to the [illegible] who were [illegible] trees like monkeys in a hurry, he made for them, allowing the officer to crawl away in fear and trembling as quietly as he could.

But in the event the man came out of everything scot free. Having discovered his power to kill the tiger, he knew more exactly how to go about it, he took every possible precaution against every man. Neither by night nor by day can the tiger, and he [illegible] long time, for whether the [illegible] or [illegible] of the tiger [illegible] the wolf they know not what turn they may take.

I know of one instance in Mysore that was [illegible] a reward of [illegible] for the tiger. He was so [illegible] that he [illegible] every possible [illegible] at every man. Neither by night nor by day can the tiger and he [illegible] long time, for whether the [illegible] or [illegible] the wolf they know not what turn they may take.
