MARK IT WELL.

A Development Peculiar to the Present Generation Dangerous and Often Fatal.

As each generation comes and goes it is marked by changes, developments and discoveries unknown to its predecessors. From a physical standpoint one of the most to be dreaded conditions and peculiar for its rapid increase during the present generation is when the mind labors under the delusion of persecution, continual restlessness, pain in the back and head, twitching of the muscles of the face and hands, furred tongue, breath foul and heavy, nausea and further indications of stomach trouble. There may be delirium, convulsions or sinking spells. Medical authorities apply different names to the conditions that are unintelligible to the average reader. The actual facts are the demoralized and dangerous state of the system is due to the accumulation of "Body Poison" in the blood that should and would be thrown off by the kidneys if in a healthy condition. In order to restore health, strike at the root of the disease with Chase's Kidney Liver Pills, the only medicine known that will control the changes going on in the kidneys, enabling them to furnish for the whole system blood free from disease-breeding poison, building up the shattered condition of the nerves and relieving mental depression. Faithful Disciples Watch the Grave of Hannah Martin.

SHE WAS A SELF STYLED MESSIAH.

Leader of a Strange Sect of Fanatics Known as the Perfectionists—She Had Proclaimed Herself Immortal—Wonderful Influence Over Her Deluded Followers

In Spring Grove cemetery, five miles from the city of Cincinnati, lies all that is mortal of Mrs. Hannah E. Martin, who was the self constituted Messiah of the extraordinary religious sect known as the "Perfectionists." She died on May 25.

Far from losing faith in their leader because of her death, which she frequently claimed could never happen, her devoted disciples may now be found at her graveside at any hour of the day or night, awaiting the resurrection she had promised them. When one person becomes wearied of long watching for some sign of the dead woman's return to life, his or her place is taken by another of the devotees, and thus throughout every hour of the 24 her sepulcher is guarded by those who adhere to her exile doctrine.

Mrs. Martin was formerly the wife of John B. Martin, a well known restaurateur of Cincinnati, writes a correspondent of the New York Herald. She became leader of the Perfectionists while married, but gradually the love for her husband dimmed in the excitement of her new role of a female Christ, and separation was soon followed by divorce. From that time on she devoted all her time to the fostering of her doctrines, and the damage her delusions have wrought has been almost incalculable.

She had been ill since November of last year, but even in her invalided condition she never for a moment relaxed control over the members of her flock and continued until the last to rule them with an iron hand. She was attended by Dr. Julia Carpenter through the weary months of her illness, which culminated, according to the doctor's certificate, in "heart failure."

The woman physician was among the stanchest of her followers and refuses pointedly to discuss the case one way or another.

Among the evils wrought under this marvelous woman's sway have been disrupted families, deaths unattended by friends or relatives and several inmates added to the local and state insane asylums. Yet, in the face of the utter falseness of the creed and its actual blasphemy, new members have been added to its ranks, and the Perfectionists were never in a more flourishing condition than at the time of their leader's death.

The home of this strange mixture of oriental beliefs and modern huggermuggery was in Walnut Hills, one of Cincinnati's most fashionable suburbs, where they practiced their tenets for 12 years. Many efforts were made by the local newspapers to root out the organization or to expose its evil by laying before the world its outrageous practices, but every endeavor, until recently, met with the sternest rebuffs, and it has been only by dint of hard work and the addition of one fact to another that the complete story has at last come out, and The Herald correspondent is now enabled for the first time to lay bare the vagaries of as sacrilegious a band of fanatics as the world has ever seen.

The Perfectionists believed in God, but the belief in Mrs. Martin was far stronger. She was Jehovah's earthly representative, imbued with his spirit and filled with his glory. From that it was but a short step to proclaim that she was a second Christ, living through God. But in their form of worship the teachings of the Saviour were never considered for a moment, and Mrs. Martin took the Son's place in the estimation of her disciples, to whom, in their secret meetings in the "sacred room," she would impart the things that God had spoken to her, and her teachings would be followed with the blind faith that has marked fanaticism in all ages.

A dozen years ago a little band of people, numbering not over 25, were studying the Bible in the Walnut Hills neighborhood and defining its teachings in the orthodox way. While they were, in a measure, religious free lances, there was then nothing bigoted or unnatural in their methods of applying the divine word, and they believed implicitly in God the Father and Christ the Son. Soon, however, they began to feel the need of a leader to take charge of their little gatherings, and eventually it fell to Mrs. Martin to arrange their studies and assume their guidance through the intricate labyrinths of religious instruction.

Perhaps Mrs. Martin had no thought then of the influence she would finally wield over these people, and she accepted their leadership willingly and even with humility.

But after a time—at first, almost imperceptibly—changes in their belief came about. The band grew in numbers, and Mrs. Martin began taking greater liberties with her congregation. She had meanwhile wrapped herself in a mantle of mystery and began to see visions and hear strange voices. Finally she claimed to hold converse with the angels, and then came the startling announcement that she had been divinely commissioned as the vicar of God on earth. It was then but a short way to claiming godlike attributes for herself, and, strange to say, the former band of Biblical students accepted her teachings blindly, and became far more ardent in their adherence to her blasphemies than they had ever been in orthodox worship.

The story of their daily life was not less marvelous than their doctrines. The name of Mrs. Martin was never spoken in or out of her presence. When speaking of the pretender, the simple designation "She" was used. "She" was absolute and held the destinies of mankind in the palm of her hand. The angels of life and death were subject to her, and the planets obeyed her commands as faithfully as the lowliest subject. Their doings were absolutely secret and their ritual was a strange mixture of theosophy, pantheism, Buddhism, Shintoism and Christianity, the whole having been welded into shape by the commanding mind of the woman Christ.

Perhaps one of the worst features, aside from the pernicious effect it had upon the individual members of the order, was that none of the believers should keep anything whatever of his daily or private life from the leader. Why such an omniscient being should not know the daily history of those who were always near her without having to be told was never explained by her any more than the remainder of her absurdities. Such matters as the amount of salary received by every member and its expenditure were reported at regular intervals to the false Christ, as was also the daily intercourse in families. Nothing was of too private or sacred a nature to keep from the all searching ears of Mrs. Martin.

As in nearly all religions, eternal life was the basis of the strange woman's teachings. There is not a member of the sect who believes in bodily death, and even the demise of their leader does not seem to have shaken their faith.

During the life of Mrs. Martin there were many deaths in the order, but she accounted for the failure of the deceased to return in the spirit by saying that they had not sufficient faith in her teachings. For three years the Bible has been banished from the circle, and all manifestations from on high came through Mrs. Martin.

Celibacy is another of the strange teachings of the peculiar sect, and each and every member is warned against the "crime" of child bearing.

The expenses were borne by the members. The money was given willingly and gladly, and there was never a question asked as to how it was to be used. Mrs. Martin had only to order an assessment, and it was forthcoming at once.

During the last two years of her reign there were occasional rebellions among her people. Upon one occasion Mrs. Brooke rebelled against her sister's teachings. A wordy war resulted, and Mrs. Brooke came out on top. Mrs. Martin was ordered under the bed by her plucky opponent, and she complied. Then Mrs. Brooke was selected leader, but she did not hold the place any length of time.

If Mrs. Brooke, who is again the leader, fails to exercise the wonderful influence commanded by Mrs. Martin, it is safe to say that in a few months the Perfectionists will vanish, just as the Simmsites faded away in Alabama.

Queer Negro Names.

The love of unique names is innate with the country darky. On the plantation of Colonel Chess Howard, in Crawford county, Ga., is a family of which the mother's name is Nani Notion Patience Peas Caroline Cornoch Elizabeth Penny. Her husband flourishes as King Solomon's Watkins, and her favorite daughter bears the euphonious title of Mitrelicious, while a younger son's name is

All things told.
Pray the good Lord
Rockey my soul.

He is never called anything less than Willie Abraham's Bosom. Another son is known as John William David Archelaus Gibson. As the family is very religious so another girl is named I Will Arise and Go to My Father. But usually she is called Iwilla for short. It was not long since that a gentleman was approached by an old darky in Maryland who said that his wife had presented him with boy twins, and that he was "agwine to name em affah de Lawd." "After the Lord? How are you going to do that?" "Wall, boss, I'se jist gwine to name 'em Hallelulah and Holloway." "Hallelulah isn't a name of the Lord. Still it might pass muster as such. But how on earth do you get in Holloway?" "Why, boss, don't yo' know dat in de Good Book it says, 'Our Father, who art in heaven, Holloway be thy name!'"

Domestic Scrappers.

Somebody has lately declared that English wives and husbands are more prone to quarrel than are American wives and husbands, only that somebody calls it "scrap," instead of "quarrel." Of course he doesn't assert that dissension is unheard of in the American household, but he maintains that there's not nearly so much of it. He also makes the distinction that in America, however common connubial "scrapping" may be, it's looked upon as most regrettable, not to say shameful. But in England they take it as a matter of course. Not long since an English couple, noted for their bickering, calmly signed a telegram, "The Scrappers," a thing that on this side of the water would scarcely have happened, even in fun. No; in the United States there still exists a good, old fashioned prejudice in favor of domestic peace, and this, too, in spite of Mr. Stevenson's declaration that marriage is nothing more nor less than the domestication of the recording angel.

Girls Follow the Pastor.

Three years ago Rev. T. E. Richards became pastor of the Cape May Court House Baptist church. He organized a band, which soon became famous throughout south Jersey. Its members comprised half a dozen young men and as many women of his church. It visited the World's fair and gained notoriety there. A short time ago Pastor Richards decided to seek new fields and left for the mountain regions of Pennsylvania. A few days later three young ladies, Miss Josephine Young, Miss Hannah Hildreth and Miss Jennie Thompson left to join the evangelist. Relatives of the young women tried hard to dissuade them from leaving home, but to no avail. Miss Young, who recently attained her majority, has a small fortune left her by her father, while each of the others leaves the best of homes. The Rev. Mr. Richards' wife and three children remain behind in their home in Cape May Court House.

No False Teeth Supplied to Prisoners.

A new question in prison practices and ethics came up in Lancaster, Pa., recently. John Sentman, a convict, serving a term for chicken stealing, sent a request to the prison inspectors that they furnish him a set of false teeth. He said he had lost his natural teeth, and could not eat. The inspectors could not find any law that authorized them to buy false teeth, and the request was refused.

Tying the Knot.

At a Babylonian wedding ceremony the priest took a thread from the garment of the bride and another from the garment of the bridegroom and tied them into a knot, which he gave to the bride. This is probably the origin of the modern saying about tying the knot in regard to marriage.

GUARDS GEORGE GOULD

Bat Masterson, Sporting Man and Desperado, In a New Role.

HAS KILLED TWENTY-EIGHT MEN.

A Long and Adventurous Career on the Frontier and Familiarity With Ways That Are Dark and Tricks That Are Desperate Fit Him For His New Post.

Bat Masterson has shaken the dust of Colorado from his feet and is at present engaged in the agreeable pastime of hobnobbing with George Gould and other distinguished nabobs of Gotham.

From advices contained in the New York press, which are confirmed by the private correspondence of the celebrated gunfist and all round sport, it appears that Bat has at last struck it rich. He is now holding the high and responsible position of bodyguard to one of the richest men in the United States. The peculiar offices of his trust are to see that George is not sandbagged, held up, bunkoed or kidnaped. In return for these vigils and for the constancy of the eye that never sleeps Bat has a sinecure. When he wants a few thousands to place on a favorite, he simply draws on George. There is an abundance of "long green," and all that George asks in return is that he shall be protected in person and property.

This custom of having a few trusted lieutenants always ready in case of danger to shield the man of wealth has grown to be a favorite fad with the multimillionaires of the metropolis. At any rate, Masterson has been engaged in that capacity, and his friends in Denver are rejoicing over what they term his lucky strike, says The Rocky Mountain News.

William B. Masterson is, perhaps the best known sporting character in the west. Time was when he left the enchantments of ring and other diversions to be a common, ordinary, everyday deputy sheriff. But this didn't last long. He wearied of the monotony.

There has not been an important sporting event in the west for many years in which Masterson hasn't had a hand.

The Corbett-Mitchell fight, however, was Masterson's "hoodoo." When that battle was pulled off at Jacksonville two years ago, Masterson risked his pile on the Englishman. He had it all figured out that Charlie was sure to win. He had the weight, the reach and all the staying qualities that, despite the popular prejudice to the contrary, made the foreigner a sure winner. Masterson was his backer at the ringside, and he was so enthusiastic as to his own conclusions that he wrote letters to the Denver papers advising his friends to place their money on Mitchell. As every one knows now, Mitchell wasn't in it at any stage of the play, but Masterson thought he was, and thought so for all the money he had or could borrow.

The result was that since that time Masterson has been in hard lines. If Masterson's stories are accurate now, the days to come are all to be of the sunshiny variety.

Masterson went west before there was a railroad traversing the country. As a government scout he had varied experiences, one of these being an encounter with two drunken soldiers. They saw Masterson riding toward them. They dismounted, tied their horses and shot the scout. Masterson, with the blood flowing from the wounds, staggered to a fence, pulled his revolver and killed both soldiers.

While he is accredited with having killed 28 men, Masterson always boasted that never but once did he fail to give a man a chance for his life. When Masterson was marshal and sheriff at Dodge City, the Santa Fe tried to build through the town. Masterson interfered on behalf of the citizens, who denied the right of the company to extend its tracks. The troops were called out to protect the company's property, and in the riot that followed Masterson's brother was killed. Masterson a short time after the fatality walked into a room where four men supposed to have been implicated in the killing of his brother were sitting. He drew his gun and killed the quartet.

When the Atchison endeavored to build across the tracks of the Rio Grande at Canon City, the latter company employed Masterson and Ben Thompson to stop the work. Thompson, who in his day killed 18 or 20 men, was afterward killed by Billy Sims at San Antonio. Masterson and Thompson held the crossing and defended the rights of the Rio Grande until the Atchison offered to settle. Masterson was holding out for $25,000, but as Thompson's life was endangered at this point in order to save his companion he accepted $10,000 for the Rio Grande.

He has the reputation of being insensible to fear and bears today the marks of bullets shot into his body by desperadoes. Once he was shot entirely through the lungs.

Act of Unusual Bravery.

An unusually brave deed is that of an engineer named Sample of the British steamer Federal. While in Champion bay, Australia, one of the water tubes of the engine burst. It being necessary to stop the escaping steam and water, he stripped, walked into the steam and boiling water and turned it off, being terribly scalded in the process.

She Made a Mistake.

In Washington they are talking of the latest malapropism by a lady who has a record in that line. A number of people were discussing the Rev. Dr. Mackay-Smith before her not long ago, and somebody said, "Is his name Smith, with Mackay for a middle name, or is it all one name?" "It's all one name," she said. "He writes it with a siphon."

THE POLICE OF BERLIN.

A Model Military Force of Six Thousand Men.

The palace of police in Berlin is the most colossal structure, save one, the capital boasts of, and the president of police is the biggest man in Berlin, save one. The royal schloss contains six or seven rooms more than the big beehive with the motto, "For Protection and Defiance," occupying 48,600 square feet on Alexander Platz. Emperor William, by the grace of God, attributes to himself a few more prerogatives than tradition guarantees to the president of police.

That office was invested with its tremendous power for good and evil by hot headed Frederick the Great, who, in his contempt for "the slaves he was governing," decreed that the chief of police should be responsible only to the sovereign. In the one hundred and forty odd years following, various strong and weak governments, actual revolution and revolutions of thought and in the condition of suffrage endowed masses have worked no end of changes in the administration of justice and executive authority even in Prussia, but amid all the turmoil and harassing circumstances the king's lieutenant in Berlin blue and silver has retained his unequal sway.

The president of police at present commands an army of 6,000 men, taught to recognize only his and the king's authority. His aids are 1 colonel, 16 captains, 4 inspectors and 104 lieutenants; 42 commissioners and 134 sergeants officer the legion of privates, composed of 240 mounted and 3,150 policemen on foot. The night service is performed by 1 inspector, 47 sergeants and 475 watchmen. Clerks, copyists, etc., make up the rest. The recruiting and disciplining of these vast forces, though governed to a certain extent by tradition, are left entirely to the president. There is no appeal from any decision he may give. His budget is close on 9,000,000 marks per annum, appropriated by the kingdom of Prussia. To that the city of Berlin adds 2,000,000 marks extra for uniforms and forage, but without acquiring thereby one particle of authority over the force, which is royal to the backbone, in the same manner as post and telegraph are controlled by the "reich."

The president represents the king's authority and the state of Prussia against the town authorities as far as the well being, the health and, generally speaking, the protection and management of citizens are concerned. Being personally responsible for the lives of the kaiser and the royal family, the omnipotent grand vizier might assume arbitrary powers at almost any moment. The system, grounded on tyranny and impossible in any but a monarchial state, may be ever so revolting to us; still one cannot help admiring its results.

Berlin has 30,000 booked and registered criminals. Her budget of crime rivals that of Paris and New York, save in the most heinous—murder. The rabble of all the German speaking countries and some of the principal English and American counterfeiters, burglars, pickpockets and common thieves honor the kaiserstadt occasionally by their presence. The rights and duties of royal policemen are infinitely greater and more elastic than those of their colleagues in American cities. For instance, but during the last ten years not a single case of police bribery, police blackmail or police connivance with criminals has been brought to public notice, in spite of the rigid investigations of the socialistic press. Annually 10 or 15 men are dismissed from the force or degraded, but their worst offenses usually are overofficiousness and inefficiency in handling great crowds. Of serious opposition to arrest, except in riot, times, we hear but rarely. Only once since 1880 has a policeman been killed in pursuit of his duty. Prisoners with broken heads, bleeding or otherwise suffering from maltreatment are unknown in Berlin. Policemen are armed with swords, which they must not draw except in defending their own lives. If, in extreme cases, an officer is forced to do so, he must bring witnesses to prove himself innocent of rashness; otherwise he must give up his sword and go without pay until his record is cleared.

The Advantages of Stupidity.

In a passage in his "Representative Government" Mr. J. S. Mill spoke of the Conservatives as being, by the law of their existence, not the stupid, but "the stupidest" party. The phrase was comparative. Sir John Pakington was grievously injured and called on Mr. Mill to explain. Mr. Mill apologized for an apparent want of politeness in the phrase, but added that he did not think that the Conservatives ought to be offended, for the fact insured their always being an extremely powerful party. Moreover, he added, he had not asserted that Conservatives are generally stupid, but that stupid people are generally Conservatives. On the other hand, he admitted that if stupidity has a tendency to conservatism, scholism and half knowledge have a tendency to liberalism. But half informed people are uncertain and capricious, thinking one thing one day and another the next, and splitting off into groups and factions. They cannot be counted on. So that the advantage remains, he concluded, with the party which has behind it the compact and solid force of sheer stupidity.
