The Umpire

At this season of the year is the "biggest" man in the country. He stands behind the catcher arrayed in a little "brief authority," a few clothes on his manly form and a Rat-Trap arrangement on his head—the latter arrangement is to catch the "Rats" that he has hurled at him from the grand stand. He decides the different plays, always beats the home team and is the only man at a ball game who couldn't do better. He is a man of rank—at least the side that gets beaten always lay it to his "rank decisions." Umpires "sometimes" give wrong decisions—when they're not looking. They all agree, however, that

THE SUNDAY STREET CARS.

SUBJECT IS MANAGEABLE WHEN KEPT WITHIN LIMITS.

Where the People Devote Sunday to Recreation They do Not, as a Rule, Attend Church—Prof. Dyde is Not an Advocate of Cars in Kingston.

I have been asked to state my view on the Sunday street car question, and have thought it advisable to comply with the request. In order to be as clear and brief as possible I shall lay down several points which should, as I think, form the basis of the discussion.

1. On the question of Sunday cars men of sense, public spirit and high morality take different sides. In the recent discussion in Toronto Rev. Prof. Clarke, e.g., whose name is associated with many public and charitable movements, advocated Sunday cars.

2. Public spirited men are agreed that no company of persons should be permitted to carry on any business contrary to the public welfare. Every civilized community recognizes more or less clearly that if business injures the general weal, it should be suppressed, no matter how lucrative it may be to the owner. In many ways it recognizes also that an employee is not a means by which an employer gets rich, but has rights of which his employer cannot deprive him.

3. Few men of sense and public spirit oppose Sunday cars on the ground that on Sunday it is a sin to do any kind of work. It is generally admitted that the Sabbath was made for man, and therefore the question is always one of public well-being.

4. In many cities everywhere street cars are run on Sunday and it is foolish to denounce the action as absolutely wrong. If we wish to look at this question squarely we must in every case consider the circumstances.

The subject is manageable when we keep within the limits set by these general remarks.

Those who favor the running of street cars on Sunday can, with reason, claim that they are considering the health and comfort of all working and business men who are employed from Monday a.m. to Saturday night. They may say that in any large city where there are no cars on Sunday men who own or can hire horses may enjoy Sunday as they please, but that those who cannot keep or hire a horse must stay at home or go to church.

But neither to stay in the house nor to go to church furnishes the rest or recreation which the workman or business man most needs. Conclusive proof of that is found in two facts (a) A large proportion of working and business men use the cars on Sunday. (b) Where the cars do not run on Sunday, many persons from these classes do not attend church.

But the question has another side. In the higher life of the community we cannot ignore assemblies convened for moral and religious purposes. Many contend that the church has not as firm a hold of the people as it ought to have, yet it ought not to be antagonized. It ought to be made easy and not difficult for people to give one day in the week to moral and religious upbuilding. Now the facts show that where the people devote Sunday to recreation they do not as a rule attend church. The argument sometimes offered that the cars will enable the people to attend church is largely a specious delusion. The gap between the church goer and the non-church goer, a gap which we should try to bridge, is widened by the introduction of the car-service on Sunday.

If this were the whole problem it would, I think, cause dismay to every one who really wishes to see both sides of the question. It would seem as if to get one good thing we must give up another, and that it must be left to each community to make its choice. But fortunately we are not forced to choose between two good things. In recent years there has been growing a feeling in favor of a more reasonable working day. Besides, it is becoming more generally accepted that six full days of hard work to one of rest is not the right proportion. The T. Eaton company, of Toronto, deserves praise for its determination to close at one p.m. on Saturday during July and August, and other stores in Toronto and elsewhere have made Friday their bargain day. Friday should be the last real business day of the week, and Saturday morning used for clearing up. Saturday afternoon would thus become a general holiday. It would be easy to grow enthusiastic over the idea of a nation giving itself up to the innocent recreation once every week and taxing the street car service to its utmost. Then the people, thoroughly refreshed in body and mind, would be ready and eager on Sunday for religious improvement. The churches would be benefited in a two-fold way. The audience would be more representative of all classes, and would be more alert and responsive.

So much for the general position. Upon the question as it now stands, two considerations may help to a decision:

1—No obstacle should be put in the way of securing Saturday afternoon for rest and social recreation, and Sunday wholly for the promotion of the spiritual life in the broadest sense of the words. Now the running of cars on Sunday prevents the second of these and at least postpones the first.

2. The half holiday would provide a playday for the multitude at large, but not for the street railway employees. No one would consent to misuse these men unless under a real necessity. Is there such a necessity? Street cars may for the present unfortunately be justifiable in places where masses of people cannot otherwise obtain relaxation from the too great strain of life. But in Kingston with its large central park and superb lake front within the city, it is a subterfuge to claim that Sunday cars are anything more than a convenience. As there is no necessity, the higher interests, if not the right also, of the employees should be respected.—S. W. DYDE.

MARINE INTELLIGENCE.

Paragraphs Picked Up About the Wharves And Elsewhere.

The prop. Melbourne takes on coal at Kingston this year.

The barge Minnie Francis is loading pulp wood here for Dexter, N.Y.

The schr. Fleetwing arrived in from Oswego yesterday with coal for Swift & Co.

Little damage was done the str. North King by her running on shoal at Brighton.

The prop. Sequin and barge are on their way down the lake with cargoes of grain.

Cleared from Garden Island: Str. Clinton and barges Lisgar, Grimsby, Port Colborne, light.

The str. Algerian, Toronto, and str. Hamilton, Montreal, were the only regular arrivals to-day.

The mariners at this port did not like the statement of Capt. Fox, of Port Hope, that those who give charters here to vessels exhibit selfishness in the patronage and that vessels from outside ports are ignored. It is contended that this charge is not correct and if it was it would only be retaliation for the way Kingston vessel men were used in Port Hope some years ago when business was good there. Those engaged in the marine business at the time referred to were very jealous of owners of vessels living outside of Port Hope and exhibited their selfishness by throwing vitriol on the sails and cutting the halyards of vessels from outside ports. One vessel man says the interests of the vessel men of Port Hope are more zealously guarded there than in any other port on the chain of lakes.

THE PASTOR ELECT.

A Portrait and Sketch of the Rev. A. W. Richardson.

Rev. A. W. Richardson, the new pastor of the First Congregational church, of this city, is a graduate in arts of McGill university and received his theological training in the Congregational college of Canada, Montreal, and in Yale college, Connecticut. His first settlement was in

THE PASTOR ELECT.

1884, over the Congregational church in Churchill, near Georgetown, where he remained six years, removing to Brantford at the call of the church in that city. He is in appearance muscular and seems to delight in muscular activity. He has participated actively while in Brantford in such sports as cycling, lawn tennis, lacrosse and baseball. His aim has been to improve the character of these sports and to secure for himself recreation for his work.

He is regarded among his brethren as independent in his thinking and fearless in the expression of his convictions. His style is in exact harmony with his general make-up. He comes to a church in this city which has long had a place among our local churches. It has been fortunate throughout its history in having had only two pastors. Its building is admirably adapted to the uses of a modern church, and once it is under the leadership of its new pastor it will, doubtless, speedily come again into line with all that is best in our life and aggressive among our christian forces.

The institution had to do without gas for one night.

Tendered An Address.

The Clarksburg Reflector reports an address presented to Dr. and Mrs. McBride, regretting their departure from Heathcote to Cataraqui. The doctor has been practicing in Heathcote for the past twelve years and had become attached to the people of that place. Mrs. McBride was born there and was held in high esteem. Dr. McBride feelingly replied for himself and wife and thanked his friends and neighbors for the kindness shown.

He Tried To Escape.

George Davis, alias Albert Lockhart, of Goderich, arrived at the Kingston penitentiary on Thursday. He will serve four years for indecently assaulting girls under fourteen years of age and horse stealing. He was in charge of Sheriff Reynolds, who had a lively time with the young man. At Scarboro junction he jumped off the train and tried to get away. The sheriff followed and had a tussle with the prisoner. During the struggle Davis bit a piece off one of the sheriff's fingers, producing a very sore hand.

TOPOGRAPHY OF CANADA.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT WANTS INFORMATION.

A Native of the United States Does Not Think Much of the Recent Despatch, Announcing That an Officer Would be Sent From That Country to Canada to Secure Information as to Its Topography.

A short time ago a despatch appeared in the papers announcing that the war department at Washington contemplated sending an officer to Canada to ascertain the topography of the country, and get information that would be of use to the United States in the case of war between England and the United States. If any difference occurred between these powers, it is judged by those in charge of the American war department that England would make Canada the base of its operations.

This morning a reporter interviewed a native of the United States who grew up in that country, and who is well posted on its constitutional affairs. When asked what he thought of the despatch he laughed, and said it was issued, in his opinion, to influence the Canadian political market in favor of the "truly loil." A general election is about to take place and it is supposed such a despatch will have a tendency to strengthen the tory ranks and federate their sections because the people may believe that war between England and the United States is imminent. The conservatives profess a great deal in the line of loyalty and they may have inspired the despatch for the reasons he had mentioned. He (the speaker) knew the despatch would not prove of any great importance. It is ridiculous to think that with 100,000 Canadian young men in the United States who know every inch of Canada and its location, the war department at Washington would not be able to get the topography of Canada without sending an officer to the country to act as a spy. He was also surprised to learn that an act had been passed by the dominion government making it treasonable to be caught furnishing information of the topography of the country to a foreign power. With two countries like the United States so close together it would not be hard to get the information spoken of respecting either countries, and no parliamentary measures could prevent it.

As to the boom in business in the United States at the present time the speaker said it was the result of the security of supplies. The manufacturers had exhausted their stocks and had to start their mills and factories to supply the demand.
