THE DOMINION OF CANADA.

The Daily British Whig.

"Opifer per Orbem Dicor."

FRIDAY MORNING, NOV. 26, 1869.

LETTERS & TELEGRAMS—A. L. & Co., Montreal; J. A. M., Ottawa; G. H. S., Quebec; G. S., London, Ont.; G. W. F., Union.

The Globe is very thankful for small favors when its party claims a victory for the passage of one of Mr. Blake's Resolutions which the Ministry adopted, and one to which no objection could be made. That there was something unfair to Ontario in the increased subsidy to Nova Scotia, is admitted by all—and by none more than by Mr. John S. Macdonald himself; yet the case was one of necessity, and it was far better to get a difficult matter arranged by the payment of money, than to have a discontented Province in the Dominion. And it is surprising to us, that a man of Mr. Blake's sound sense did not see it in the same light.

The Session of Parliament will probably last another month, tho' we don't see what they have to do to keep the House sitting so long. There is only the School Bill likely to be troublesome; all the other Bills, all the good ones, will pass without much debate. The Assessments Act and the Municipal Act may both require amendment, but it is to be hoped, and wished for, that the Premier will do nothing in a hurry, but allow both Acts to have another year's trial, ere he amends them. They are not very defective, and this tampering with Acts of Parliament year after year is very poor legislation.

It is fortunate for Ontario that it has nothing to do with the Red River matter, that pertaining to the Dominion Government. It is a question to us at least, whether the possession of so distant a territory is worth fighting for. It can never be but a bill of expense for many years to come, and if its Inhabitants don't want to be annexed to Canada, let them stay unannexed. And it is still more fortunate that the £300,000 has not been paid to the Hudson's Bay Company. That payment is to take place on the 1st of December, and doubtless Mr. Rose has been advised not to pay, until peaceable possession of the territory can be assured.

On Wednesday, Mr. Sandfield Macdonald was defeated on Mr. Clarke's Bill on the Law of Evidence, but then his own colleague, Mr. Wood, voted against him. In reply to some taunting remarks on the part of Mr. Blake, he said the hon. gentleman seemed somewhat elated at his having voted last night for a resolution which he proposed. He was so jubilant that he could not allow an occasion of this sort to pass without reminding him of it, but he knew perfectly well that he owed that success to a combination of parties that usually support the Government. He wished to say a few words with respect to the observations that had been called forth, before this question was consigned to a Committee. It should be, he thought, a wonder how they got along at all with the law that prevailed now—that they should not have broken down; they had been boasting that they were going along in a march of material prosperity, and yet they were under the rule of this infamous law which had been condemned that night. The only wonder was how they got along at all, (A laugh), but now they had discovered that they could get along better. He had stood in that House many years ago, and had always opposed measures of sweeping changes, but had lived to see some which had been passed repealed, and to see them acknowledge to be failures. He felt strongly that this was a wrong move; but he confessed that he must bow to public opinion. He had not made it a party question, and had called no caucuses, no conventions, nor had he given away any champagne. He was about to make some observations with reference to the morality of the people of this country. He had, before Mr. Blake was born, declared that Canadians were as good as any other nation. He had done all he could for the people; but it became the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake) to say that he had forgotten the obligations he owed to his country and to the people to whom he owed his present position; and he would say in reply that when he spoke of the moral condition of the same class in Canada being of a lower grade than that class in England, he referred to the class of litigants, and he would repeat that that class in this country would not compare with its type in England. In England law was an expensive luxury, and those who engaged in it were men of the highest standard, and were of greater intelligence than those who engaged in this country. And in addition to that they had in England learned barristers and judges who were competent to deal with the results of this law, and that in this was found the explanation of the fact that it worked well in England. A similar result could not be expected here, for they had not the high standard neither of clients nor of the legal profession that was obtained in England. He believed the bill would fail, and that it would not have the effect in this country that it was expected to produce. Having said thus much, he must succumb not in anger but in sorrow. He was sincere in what he said, and he would only add that he would repel the insinuation that he wished to cast upon the people of this country an unmerited obloquy, when he said that they were not equally trained to that same class in England.

Morton's Distillery.

DEAR WHIG,—

Why cannot some enterprising gentlemen take hold of this splendid Distillery. Everybody is aware of the noble fortune amassed by the late Mr. James Morton in carrying on the business of this establishment. The immense benefit that Kingston and the surrounding country would derive from it is incalculable. And it is wonderful that the matter has not been brought to public notice long ago. Here is a magnificent brewery and distillery lying absolutely idle, and why? Simply because, as it seems, there are none able or willing to work it. The whole thing is disgraceful, especially to old Kingston. A company that would take hold of the establishment would have no trouble whatever in getting any amount of stock subscribed. Then, we say, let some one take hold of it at once, as it is really too bad to see so great an amount of wealth going to loss.

THE NORTH WEST.

Hudson Bay Stores seized by the Insurgents.

St Paul, Minn., Nov. 23.

A gentleman just in from Fort Garry says, that the English half-breeds and whites are taking little or no part in the demonstration which is being made chiefly by French half-breeds.

The system of passes has been adopted and the strictest surveillance is exercised.

The insurgents have taken possession of the Hudson Bay Company's storehouses, and are dealing out to themselves daily rations from the Company's supplies.

Dr. Bown, the Editor of the Nor'Wester, was arrested for refusing to print a proclamation for the insurgents, and the printers, at the mouth of the musket, were forced to issue the revolutionary documents, which was posted in various parts of the rebellious district.

TWO SISTERS IN A BRAWL—ANCIENT HEROINE.

The Ottawa Herald tells the following story:—"Two maiden sisters, Polly and Sally Reed, aged 85 and 82, who have lived alone in scanty circumstances in Buckfield, Madison County, were found by a neighbor on the morning of the 12th inst., Polly dead on the floor, and Sally lying on the bed in a helpless condition. The latter died on Saturday. They were both terribly mutilated about the head and face. They had often before had frequent quarrels on the most trivial provocations. The weapons used were a pair of tongs and a stick of wood. No inquest was held."

Philadelphia Sensation.

ANOTHER "LORD AINSLEY."

The Philadelphia Age has the following:—

"There has been a sudden explosion in our higher life circles—an explosion that has caused dismay and grief. Some few weeks ago the announcement appeared that a young man, who for three years prior had been serving the guests of a Harrisburg hotel with trips and broiled fish balls, had fallen heir to an immense fortune. Discarding the towel, the spoon, and dispensing that air of servile submission which all thoroughly instructed waiters are supposed to possess, he launched out in a career of fashionable excitement and flirtation. He came to this city. The report spread quickly of the fortune which, by death of an aunt in England he had fallen heir to; and gossip passed it from mouth to mouth, until it was declared, with his sanction that he was the lucky possessor of $70,000,000. To authenticate all this he would show what appeared to be true and faithful transcripts of the will, deeds, &c., of the great estate. He became intimate with our Market street merchants. Possessing the sesame, check and money, he found no difficulty in creeping into fashionable society, and then springing up as a real, undisguised lion.

"A certain West Philadelphia congressman trundled his coach and to convey the young lord about. The managers of a number of our charitable institutions received his notes, promising donations of startling extravagance. He even went so far as to declare his intention of enriching the friends who had known him when he was nothing more than a poor, downtrodden server of trips of steak; and living in this belief, they invited him to their homes, and treated him in as friendly a manner as their means would allow. About a week ago the great denouement came. It was discovered that while he had received a small fortune, about $5,000, through his own actions and conceits it was puffed up to the enormous amount named. What he did has caused him along me three weeks with all the relat and individual grandeur that envelopes a pirate. His money is gone; he is down wherever he is known, and the hon ton now wonder at their short-sightedness in believing him endowed with the wealth he confessed to.

Rare the Murderer.

The London Echo, of November 8, publishes the following extraordinary story:—

"A venerable old man is now perambulating Regent street and its vicinity, soliciting those ready alms which an enlightened English public is ever disposed to drop into the extended palm of age and indigence. The features of this interesting mendicant have probably been somewhat altered during the forty years which have elapsed since he adorned a public station (in the dock at Edinburgh), or he must have been more generally recognized by the thousands who have beheld his effigy at Mme Tussaud's. In that famous Chamber of Horrors, which has been so wickedly called England's Walhalla, and which certainly holds out the most formidable threat of earthly immortality with which we are acquainted, there stand in an obscure corner two mean little dwarfish figures, represented as if in eager consultation. The visitor on turning turning to his catalogue, finds that they are respectively the likenesses of the notorious Burke and Hare—the former who was hanged at Edinburgh on the 28th January, 829. If the visitor be not old enough to remember the public excitement of that distant period, when even single murders were rarities, and the slaughtering of Paatin and Horner undreamed of—or, should we say, unreported?—he will further read that the two miscreants were convicted of suffocating people for the sake of selling their bodies for dissection. Burke's crime was then deemed so portentous that he had the honor of actually adding a word to the English language, and the verb "to burke," even yet survives as a convenient metaphor applicable to violently suppressed projects, as the guillotine records for all generations the benevolent invention of the abbe whose name it bears. Such was the fate of Burke—himself "burked" by the Calcraft of the period, but made immortal in waxwork and in slang. But what of Hare? His penalty, it seems, must have been more like that of the Wandering Jew; for, as we have said, there he is to this day, begging in Regent street.

"The secret of his identity has oozed out, and as it is feared by the fraternity to which he now belongs that it may injure the trade, one of them some time since took measures to vindicate his character. A beggar whose age and appearance might cause him to be mistaken for the ex-convict, wore a placard on his breast stating that he was not 'Hare.'"

Some people in Canada believe that Hare lived some years near Wardsville, on the Thames, and if we are not mistaken he is reported to have died.

Piles are a very common affection, there being but few persons who are not troubled with them at some period of their life. The disease exists in small tumors in the rectum of about the anus, which are divided into, first, those which are owing to a distended state of the veins of the part, and, second, those which present the character of a solid tumor. When the tumors are within the rectum, they are called internal piles when without and around the anus, external. When they discharge blood they are termed bleeding piles, and when no blood appears, blind piles. Dr. J. Briggs' Pile Remedy, remarkable for its superior excellence, should be used for this painful affliction. All who have tried it, do not hesitate to say it is superior to anything they have ever used for this disease. Sold by Druggists and Country Merchants generally. Dr. J. Briggs & Co., Proprietors, No. 208 Broadway, N. Y., and No. 6 King St. West, Toronto.

Dr. J. Briggs' Pile Remedy is acknowledged by all who have tried it (and their name is Legion) to be the best, most successful and efficacious Remedy ever used for that disease. Sold by E. H. Parker and R. White, Kingston; and all Druggists.

The French Horror.

CONFESSION OF THE PANTIN MURDERERS.

The Paris Opinion Nationale contains the following:

"We learn from a source which we have every reason to believe trustworthy that the wretched assassin of Pantin, pressed by questions, and perhaps tired of struggling against the overwhelming charges made against him, has made a full confession. He alone is guilty, and the following is as possible the account he has given of the horrible massacre. After having assassinated the elder Kinck on the 25th August in a plain near Gueberville, and buried him in a spot he has carefully described, Troupmann determined to get rid of the old woman, who, it will be remembered, had in consequence of his false indications gone to the police office at Gueberville to ask for an order for 5,000fr. sent by Madame Kinck to her husband. Gustave Kinck, upon returning to Paris, was allured to Pantin and assassinated, two days before his mother, a few paces from the hole that was to be the grave of the whole family. Finally, on the 26th September, after having made all his preparations, Troupmann took the Kinck family in a cab to Pantin. On reaching the Chemin Vert he induced Madame Kinck to alight with her little girl and the youngest of the boys. After passing the last of the houses which line this narrow, tortuous, and henceforth sinister avenue, they arrived in the plain. The hole had been dug in a part of the ground which could not be very distinctly seen from the Aubervilliers road. The cab stationed at the Chemin Vert, and the windings of the road prevented the driver from suspecting the frightful crime which was about to be committed five hundred yards further off. Troupmann fell with lightning-like rapidity upon the little girl, whom he stabbed repeatedly, and threw her still living into the hole; he then fell upon the mother, with whom he had a short struggle—a struggle of the great difference, according to the statement of the assassin himself, which has been communicated to us by a trustworthy person, the youngest of the boys clung to the dress of Madame Kinck, and uttered the most piercing cries (those no doubt which were heard by the watchman of a neighboring manufactory). The cries soon ceased, and the assassin continuing his work has gone in search of the eldest and the two younger boys who unsuspectingly remained in the cab. The two younger boys advanced towards the hole according to the directions of Troupmann, holding each other by the hand; the eldest followed a few steps behind. He was the strongest of the three, and it was with him the assassin commenced. He threw a noose round his neck, strangled him, cut the throats of the other two, whom he cast a few steps away, and then returning to his other, who showed some signs of life, finished him with the knife. The rest is well known. The indictment will, no doubt, supply every information upon the pretexts adopted by Troupmann to deceive a mother and her five children to so desolate a spot, and especially at such a late hour, when the prolonged absence of her husband and her son Gustave must have already caused her some anxiety. The trial will soon take place, and Troupmann has already chosen his counsel.

Not a mysterious name, but a mysterious remedy. Dr. J. Brigg's Renovator, the great Throat and Lung Healer, Blood Purifier, Stomach Regulator, Liver Invigorator and Life Preserver. This very pleasant and Life preserving Compound is prepared with great care by Dr. J. Briggs who has spent much time and money in perfecting its composition, and although the ingredients are not made public, as some others are, they are nevertheless such as are blended together in harmony, and fully answer their mission to heal the sick, expel impurities and disease, cleanse, strengthen, invigorate, and restore to health and happiness, the wasted and diseased frame, bringing joy to the once despondent household. Its virtues are rare, and incomparable. Sold everywhere. Dr. J. Briggs & Co., No. 6 King St., West, Toronto.

Kingston Marine.

The brig Baltimore has laid up at Glassford, Jones & Co.'s; the schr. Clyde and prop Bruno are being dismanted at the Montreal Transportation Company's Wharf. The schooner Richardson is laid up at Gurney & Gliddon's.

The str. Kingston left Prescott yesterday morning for Kingston.

The str. Rochester still makes trips up the Bay, but only as far as Milltpoint, where the ice blockade begins.

The schooner Annexation was launched from the ways of the Marine Railway last evening, and has gone into winter quarters in good repair.

The prop. Dominion passed up yesterday, bound for St. Catharines. She is the last boat through the canals for this season.

The props. St. Lawrence and Magnet passed down loaded to Prescott yesterday, and will return here to lie up.

The tug Hercules, of Messrs. Calvin & Breck, went out to the relief of the schr G. Thurston on Wednesday night, and was to begin operations yesterday.

ABANDONED.—The str. H. A. Calvin returned on Wednesday morning from the scene of the wreck of the schr. Montcalm, and reports her beyond aid. The steamer dismantled her, and brought down the salvage.

THE R. M. LINE.—The R. M. str. Spartan arrived from Toronto on Tuesday night, and has laid up at Swift & Co.'s for the season. The str. Kingston passed down to Prescott on Wednesday morning, and will return here at once to lie up. The Champion, Magnet, Passport and Corinthian, are in winter quarters at Montreal—the Corinthian, on Wednesday of last week, making the last passage to that port.

GOT OFF.—The str. H. A. Calvin, with the schr. Gazelle, as a lighter, reached the barque Jessie Drummond, on Wednesday afternoon. The Jessie Drummond went ashore, as stated, on Pigeon Island, in a snow storm, and was two feet out of the water. A portion of the cargo was lightened into the schooner, and the tug got the barque off and brought her in yesterday morning—vessel and cargo uninjured. She has discharged and will lie up here.

SINGULAR.—One insurance firm, in this city, took risks, within two months, on eight or nine vessels, all bound to the upper lakes, and only one, so far, has escaped disaster before completing the trip. Notable instances have been the schooners Warren, Trenton, Tom Rayner, John Weeden, and barque Waterwitch. This, though, is only a slight instance of what the season has been on all vessels.

THE ROCHESTER.—This str. left Kingston for Belleville on Tuesday, but could not proceed further than Mill Point on account of the ice, and returned here on Wednesday morning to lie up. On her downward trip on Monday she passed through miles of it, and the return trip was certainly a venturesome one.

WELLAND CANAL.—By the means of tugs being used to break the ice in the Welland Canal, it is still open for the passage of all vessels.

Customs Imports—In Bond.
