WHIG'S FASHION LETTER

LATEST HINTS FROM NEW YORK CITY.

The Fancy Bodice Triumphs Over Time—Black Will be Fashionable—Rosettes are in Fashion.

New York, April 6.—Waists may come and waists may go, but the fancy bodice, like the oft-quoted brook, flows on forever—and in unlimited variety. Fashion having declared herself by the introduction of definite Easter modes, her apostles are now preparing for the reception of subsequent designs which, at this time, are embraced in the bodice.

An entire volume might be written upon this all-important subject and yet the glory of the separate waist would not be fully sung. The first chapter could treat of new materials, and of these there are many. All are silky of texture and diaphanous in weave and they may be found in every imaginable tint from red to indigo, with variations of each hue in the prismatic order. Among the most fashionable of these fabrics are silk chambraie, tissu de soie, batiste pointille and nanzouk-a-filets, with improvements upon lawns under the fashionable titles of mousseline de l'inde and azalea lawns. Needless to say that these materials require a silken lining. The woman who economizes, however, makes her foundations separate from the bodice, and thus one lining does duty as foundation for several waists.

Black will be more fashionable during the coming summer than it has been for several years. Mrs. John Jacob Astor, whose name is a synonym for perfect taste in dress as well as for millions, affects this color very much and is said to have ordered some very charming black gowns for the Newport season. These are relieved with a dainty bit of color in one of the fade shades. A design recently finished is particularly striking. It is developed in tissu de soie. This is draped over a lining of dull black satin, and the tissu de soie is appliqued with black spangles. The bodice is gathered at the neck and waist at the back and curved very sharply at the sides to outline the prevailing L'Aiglon effect. The front droops slightly over a belt of electric blue panne which is held in place with a dull silver buckle studded with turquoises. About the yoke are delicate touches of blue marked by tiny rosettes of velvet ribbon. The collar is an austere little affair in black and blue and compromises much of the smartness of the bodice.

Another very pretty design is composed of black Brussels net made over white taffeta. Incisions are made in the net at frequent intervals and filled in with black renaissance insertion. There is a yoke of black and white embroidery which extends in broad expanse across the front and fastens—heaven knows where. The adjustment of bodices, as well as skirts, is a veritable mystery in these days of innumerable frills and furbelows. The sleeves of the waist in question extend below the elbow and fall over an undercuff of white taffeta gathered upon a band of black and white oriental embroidery. The taffeta is draped with black silk net.

One cannot write of fancy bodices without giving a brief mention to separate skirts. The day of the frilled skirt has returned. In fact the tunic effect is disappearing so rapidly that within a few months the over shirt will be positively passe. Circular flounces, several in number and graduated in width, are affected by tall women with splendid effect. The short sisterhood is confined rather to bands, stitchings and appliques, but with the circular effect in cut, skirts so trimmed are just as fashionable and, in fact, vie favorably with their more decorative rivals.

Much attention is given to sleeves just now, and it is well that this is so, for the fancy bodice of last season which has lost its pristine freshness may do duty anew with a fresh pair of sleeves. That important personage, the "renovateurij has increased in usefulness with up-to-datizing of name, and in many of the establishments where cleaning is made a specialty, there are attached dressmaking departments where new sleeves and collars are substituted for old ones and the possibilities of remodelling carried out upon a bodice until it is an entirely new object.

For home artist there are many ideas presented. Lace collars and boleros are fashionable and beside have a very convenient element of concealing blemishes. Silk sleeves which "crack" quickly are trimmed with bias bands of satin and ribbon ruches and in this way worn through another season as gracefully as though capable of examination.

Rosettes are made of all the soft silk materials and are placed indiscriminately upon the bodice. They are glorified with centres of brilliants and combined with laces until placed beyond the reach of the average woman in the matter of cost.

It is impossible to lay down any regular rule for the making and trimming of bodices. Sufficient to say that laces, ruches, braids and ribbons all are used in the greatest variety, and one must depend largely upon individual excellence in taste for the fashionable success of the toilette for whatever occasion it is intended.

Convention Postponed.

THE MEANING OF EASTER

THE SACRED DAY OF ALL THE YEAR.

The Day on Which Christ Triumphed Over Sin and Death—Nature's Symbols of The Resurrection—Easter Different From Other Festival Seasons.

O day of days! shall hearts set free
No "Minstrel rapture" find for thee?
Thou art the Sun of other days,
They shine by giving back the rays;
Enthroned in thy soverign sphere,
Thou sheddest thy light on all the years

There is no festival season in the full round year so sacred, so appealing to the spiritual nature of mankind as Eastertide. Christmas, with its gifts and good cheer, with its homecomings and glad rejoicings by the cheery fireside, typifies the birth of Christ, and is a day universally recognized and beloved. New Year's ushers in the beginning of a new period of time, and is a festival season for the makers (who are perhaps afterwards the breakers) of good resolutions. Thanksgiving, when the golden harvest has been gathered in and, out of the fullness of God's liberality, there is ample provision made for the children of men so that all who toil may be supplied, is a day of gratefulness to the Giver of all good things.

But Easter—the day for which all other days were made—stands apart from all these festal days, as something nobler, higher and better. It is the day that Christ rose from the dead, thereby proving to a doubting world that He was able to triumph over death. "O, death, where is thy sting! O, grave where is thy victory!" Death and the grave have been brought under subjection by the omnipotent power of a risen Jesus. They have lost their dread to the believer who has founded his faith on the teachings and works of the Crucified One. And so on Easter Sunday we celebrate the resurrection of Christ, in all lands into which civilization has penetrated. In the churches special services are held, appropriate to the day.

In the phenomenal world, the resurrection is remarkably and beautifully exemplified. The sun sinks upon the western sea and rises again in the orient; and the moon wanes, disappears, and then returns in full-orbed glory. Yet, in terrestial nature, the emblematic representation of this astonishing and sublime verity is far more forcible and striking in its significence. The earth becomes torpid in winter, and freshens again in spring; flowers revive and array themselves in a loveliness far surpassing the royal glory of Solomon; the caterpillar dies as a chrysalis, and recovers new life under the beauteous transformation of the butterfly. But these symbolic developments only show the possibility and probability of the resurrection of the dead; they do not incontrovertibly demonstrate it. It was divinely reserved for the christian revelation to bring "life and immortality to light"—not merely the "life and immortality" of the soul, but the "life and immortality" of humanity; for "salvation," says Dr. Davis, includes the complete deliverance of the whole man, body as well as soul, from the power of sin and death.

Reminiscent.

Washington Star.

When we played shinney, long ago,
Our clothing did not fret us.
We wore no coats of sunset glow—
Our mothers would not let us.
Oh, we were coltish in our glee:
We loved to prance and whinney
We asked no "niblick" and no "tee"
When we were playing shinney.

Oh, where are those companions now—
The thin boy we called "fatty;"
The boy ill clad, with grimy brow;
The boy so neat and natty;
The boy who was so very fat
His comrades named him "skinny?"
There is no friendship here like that
We knew while playing shinny.

Perchance, one day, a club I'll take
And set the golf ball flying,
At least, an effort I may make;
There's naught, you know, like trying.
But I shall miss those boyish friends,
So freckle-faced and grinny;
No modern game can make amends
For those lost hours of shinny.

Laid At Rest.

The remains of the late Mrs. Galbraith were met at the Grand Trunk railway station on Friday and conveyed to Cataraqui cemetery, where they were interred in the lot of the bereaved husband, near the graves of a son and daughter. The service of committal was ready by Rev. Messrs. McIntyre and Crothers, of Belleville, and Rev. Messrs. Brown and Lancelley, of Kingston. Rev. Mr. Galbraith has been shown the sincerest marks of sympathy. The grave at Cataraqui is lost to sight in its covering of floral tributes to the dead.

An Easter Prayer.

She knelt with her silver-bound psalter,
In a glory of purple and gold,
Like a row of white brides at the altar
The lilies began to unfold.
The tapers aflame in their sconces
On the cross and the crucifix shone
And it happened between the responses
She murmured a prayer of her own.

"Oh, Lord! when I die and am hidden
In a windowless chamber of clay,
If ever by Thee I am bidden
To rise from the dust and decay,
Then let me some morning awaken
A beautiful lily to be,
And into thy altar be taken
To blossom at Easter for thee.

A Barge On Fire.

About half-past six o'clock last evening, fire was discovered in the cabin of the barge Jessie, lying at Anglin's wharf. The firemen responded to a call, and the chemical engine was used to extinguish the blaze. Not a great deal of damage was done. The barge is owned by John Fisher, Portsmouth.

Appreciated Her Service.

A pleasant surprise awaited Miss L. Singleton, organist of Queen street Methodist church, Thursday afternoon, when a committee of Queen's glee and mandolin club waited on her and made a presentation of an oval-shaped solid silver jewel casket of very beautiful design. During their tour last fall Mrs. Singleton was their efficient pianist, and the presentation on Thursday was a slight recognition of her very valuable services.

Why People Become Deaf

Evidence Which Goes to Show That The Most Common Cause of Deafness is Catarrh, and That The Hearing Can be Completely Restored.

Until recent years it was not altogether understood what the real cause of deafness was, and why people in some countries are so much more affected than in others. The late Sir Morrel McKinzie, who was the greatest authority on diseases of the throat proved that the great causes of deafness were diseases which more or less settled in the Throat, such as Diptheria, Quinsy, Catarrh, etc., by far the greater percentage of deafness comes from Catarrh. The Eustachian tube, which leads from the back of the throat to the ears, becomes inflamed, where the swelling that is produced thereby blocks up these tubes and shuts the air out from the drum, which does not allow it to convey the noises for which nature intended it. First, strange, buzzing, or roaring noises are heard, then gradually increasing deafness. The first evidence that we will bring to show you that deafness can be cured is that of Mrs. Alex. Brown, Warren, Ont. She writes:—"For years I had been troubled with Catarrh, which affected my hearing. For five years I could not hear a watch tick. I spent much money foolishly in search of a cure, but received no permanent benefit until I used Japanese Catarrh Cure. After I had used the second bottle, my hearing gradually got better. I continued until I had used five bottles, which has resulted in completely curing every trace of Catarrh and restoring my hearing. I feel very grateful for the wonderful benefit received from Japanese Catarrh Cure, as it has done for me what hundreds of dollars spent with doctors and scores of remedies failed to do."

Mr. J. N. Spencer, 11 Coolmine avenue, Toronto, writes:—"One month's treatment with Japanese Catarrh Cure has completely cured me of Catarrh of the Nose and Throat, and restored my hearing. Previous to using this remedy I doctored with specialists in Toronto and Winnipeg (while there about three years ago), but I found Japanese Catarrh Cure the only remedy which really improved my hearing. It is now almost as acute as any person's could be, while before I could not converse with any person at any distance, and could not use the telephone. I am pleased to recommend Japanese Catarrh Cure and have every reason to believe my cure is permanent, as it is now over a year since I used the remedy."

Japanese Catarrh Cure is the only practical and permanent cure for Catarrh or Catarrhal Deafness. It is pleasant and easy to use. All druggists sell it complete for 50 cents. Trial size, 10 cents by mail, postpaid, from The Griffiths & Macpherson Co., Limited, Chemists, Toronto, Can.
