SIXTY YEARS' ABSENCE.

A CENTENARIAN AT THE THOUSAND ISLANDS.

Duff Pecor, Of Oswego, Served in The Patriot War, and Helped Burn the British Gunboat, Sir Robert Peel.

Robert Maxwell, a Detroit steamboat man, entertained a party of friends, Sunday, to a trip among the Thousand Islands, and the presence of "Duff" Pecor, of Oswego, who is nearly 100 years old, made the trip an eventful one. Despite his advanced age Mr. Pecor stood the journey well. He declared upon leaving the boat last night that he was not sorry he had gone. He was surrounded all day by people who found much pleasure in listening to his reminiscent stories.

He had not visited the St. Lawrence river in sixty years before. When a young man he served in the patriot war, and was one of a band who burned the British gunboat Sir Robert Peel, as she lay at the Peel dock on Wellesley island, between Thousand Island Park and Alexandria Bay.

The place was pointed out to Mr Pecor as the boat passed. The anchor of the gunboat still marks the spot, occupying a prominent position on the river bank. A woman ventured to ask him if the place looked natural. Instantly Mr. Pecor blurted out "How in the devil can I tell. We came in the night and went in the night, and it's more n sixty years ago."

He did not enthuse a great deal over the summer residences and hotels along the river. He said it looked as though the millionaires were trying to make a show.

A Successful Picnic.

Seeley's Bay, Aug. 20. The anniversary picnic of St. Peter's church, held last Wednesday, (14th inst.), in S. Gardner's grove, was a decided success, a large crowd being present who spent an enjoyable time. The receipts were about $100. An autograph quilt was auctioned off, George Taylor, M.P., becoming the purchaser. A game of baseball was played between the Elgin and Seeley's Bay team, which resulted in favor of the Elgin team. Charles McCutcheon, John and William Jamieson, W. Hiscock and Charles Sweet left last Thursday for the Manitoba harvest fields. The public school re-opened last Monday. The steamer John Milne loaded last Monday 165,000 drain tile here for Alexandria Bay. J. A. Stacey is ill. Miss M. E. Moore, who resided with her grandfather, Thomas Moore, the past year, has returned to Elkton, Mich. Mrs. A. Johnson has returned from a visit to Forfar and vicinity. Mrs. Samuel Simpson, sr., an old and respected resident, died on Aug. 7th, aged sixty-seven years. The funeral on Friday was largely attended. The body was interred in Morton cemetery. Master Fred Chapman, Havelock, is visiting friends here.

Fifty-One Years Married.

Fifty-one years of happy wedded life is a blessing accorded to few. Mr and Mrs. Joseph Jamieson, Johnston street, are two who have been thus favored. On Monday last they celebrated the fifty-first anniversary of their marriage, and in commemoration of the event a number of friends gathered in the evening to wish Mr. and Mrs. Jamieson many happy returns. The respected couple were married at Montreal by Rev. M. Taylor, Presbyterian, on August 19th, 1850. Of a family of ten, nine survive to comfort the parents in the autumn of their life. Mr. and Mrs. Jamieson have been residents of Kingston for a great many years and have won the esteem and respect of everybody with whom they came in contact. Though years have tinged their hair with grey, still they are hale and hearty and give promise of spending many years to come with their family and friends.

Sues a Customs Officer.

Syracuse, N.Y., Post-Standard.

Summons has been served in a suit brought by Mrs. R. R. Tuttle of this city against Charles Hosmer, a customs officer at Thousand Island park, for alleged slander. She claims that on a visit to Kingston she bought a buckle for $2, which she wore on her waist as she returned to the park. The customs officer requested her to step into his office and there he questioned her about the buckle. He told her, it is claimed, that he did not believe her when she said that she did not pay more than $2 for it. Damages to the amount of $5,000 will be asked.

Formerly Lived In Kingston.

One of the passengers drowned off the steamer Islander which struck an iceberg while en route from Vancouver, B. C., to Skagway, was Peter W. Bell, who resided on George street, this city, for three or four years. Three years ago Mr. Bell left Kingston, and was afterwards interested in mines in the Michipicoten district. Then he went to British Columbia, and latterly lived in Vancouver. A wife, three sons and two daughters survive. Deceased was one of the former Hudson Bay company factors.

THE COURT OF ARBITRATION.

charged $2 each for erecting transformers, the city claims the work can be done for $1. The city accepted the company's figures, $4,177.48 for T. & H. meters, and $563.73 for Sheffer meters, subject in each instance to reasonable deduction for depreciation. The company charged $786.75 for Shallenburger meters, the city placed the cost at $602.50. Messrs. Campbell and Thompson, experts for company and city respectively, had a consultation, and agreed to split the difference, the meters being placed at $696.75. The company's price for Duncan meters, $102.60, was accepted by the city, subject to a reasonable deduction for depreciation. The city claimed the Edison chemical meters were out of date and placed their total value at $172, the company charged $1,625.37 for them. The company charged $1 for erecting meters, but the city claimed 50c. each was sufficient.

Sparkles From The Proceedings.

Thompson, D. A. Starr, and J. Ross, Montreal, the city's expert electricians, are in attendance, assisting the city's counsel.

Archdeacon Carey was a spectator for a few minutes, but he could not keep awake. He left the room with the remark: "The proceedings are far duller than a church service."

J. M. Campbell, who prepared the data for the company, showed great mastery of detail in his work. He had each section of the plant separately prepared, typewritten under headings, each paragraph numbered, and each page lettered. No trouble was experienced in turning up each paragraph desired. If the city will have its facts marshalled as well, the sittings will be considerably shortened.

Just before the close of Tuesday afternoon's session, John McIntyre, K.C., on behalf of the city, served the company with a subpoena to produce all the papers, invoices, accounts, documents, books, etc., in connection with the electric light plant, showing original cost of the machinery and other appliances. The company produced the books, etc., this morning. Some of the documents go back to 1885. There was nearly a whole cart load of books, papers and other documents.

Regarding labor expended on the outside plant, Mr. Campbell estimated it as $10,000. Mr. Brown's estimate of an increase of fifty per cent. would represent the labor as having cost $15,000. There was also a difference of $3,300 increase between Mr. Campbell's estimate of the incidentals outside the power house, and the estimate made by Mr. Brown. Mr. Brown also increased the cost of the labor expended with the power house by fifteen per cent. over Mr. Campbell's estimate, making a difference of about $120.

An Employee's Excursion.

Yarker, Aug. 19. The Sunday school of St. Anthony's church, Yarker, will run an excursion to Lake Ontario park on August 28th. The Benjamin manufacturing company gave their employees an excursion to Sydenham, giving them and their families free excursion tickets, outsiders paid 25c and many went with them. The married and single men played a game of baseball for five dollars, the game was hotly contested and the score was very close, thirty-six to thirty, in favor of the married men. Some of the men have not played ball since school days. The game was very amusing at times. Florence Scott, Napanee, is at William Montgomery's. Maud O'Mara has returned from Syracuse. Everton Emberly has secured Battersea school. School opened today. Teachers are Miss Asselstine and Mrs. Bowman. John Wright is showing up some fine work in veranda building. He just completed two, one for A. Connoly and one for S. Winter. The old wheel factory is being cleared out of stock by George Taylor, Gananoque, he having bought the stock. William Hill has recovered from illness, and left for the east for a change. A. Snare and family have returned from Chaumont, N.Y. F. Hart has placed a handsome new organ in the church of St. Anthony here. Miss H. Connoly has purchased a new piano from Vanluven Bros.

Salem Sayings.

Salem, Aug. 19. Mrs. F. C. Taggart and daughter, Myrtle, Fort Perry, and Mrs. Peter Ewing, Carlton Place, visited friends here last week and left for Kingston on Saturday via steamer Kidean Queen. The trustees of Salem, have made great improvements in the appearance of the school house during vacation. Samuel Gourlie and wife are guests of William Croskery. William Croskery and wife have adopted two of Deborm Deacon's children.

Kingston is not in league with the Ontario women who will not complete with Quebec province in increase of population. Rev. G. L. Starr, of St. George's cathedral, has had eight baptisms within ten days. One of the infants was from Ohio, brought here by the father to be christened with Kingston as one of his names.

A. W. Johnston, Toronto, has been appointed representative for the International correspondence school, for Kingston district and expects to make things hum during the coming season, having had four years' experience at the work. He has the best wishes of his many friends and acquaintances for success in the old limestone city.

Dominion government telegraphs are now extended to Chateau Bay in the straits of Belle Isle and stations have been established at Pointe Du Maurier, Harington, Mutton Bay, St. Augustin, Bonne Esperance, Blanc Sablon, Red Bay and Chateau Bay.

There is a possibility that judge Craig, Renfrew, was a passenger on the steamer Islander. He left Skagway for the front on August 14th.

John Patterson, Shelburne, Ont., died Tuesday night in St. Boniface hospital, Winnipeg. Deceased was taken ill shortly after his arrival.

At Norway House, N.W.T., Helen Frog, accused of murdering her husband, was acquitted. The evidence was circumstantial.

Sir Charles Tupper left Winnipeg for the old country on Tuesday night. He goes via the C.P.R. and steamer Pretorian.

Summer sale commences to-morrow at Jenkins'.

I had become, against my wishes, and to my vast inconvenience, a second father to this Corean. I had given him a new spell of life. I had introduced him into a novel phase of existence. The world into which I had brought him was at all events the opposite to that of Corea. There nothing was ever altered. No fresh ideas ever rose to birth. There all men did and thought as their grandfathers and great great grandfathers had acted and thought. In the Corean world there was neither progress nor retrogression. It was at a standstill. Nothing had ever surprised anyone in Corea from time immemorial, for nothing had ever been out of the routine. Consequently the faculty of feeling surprised was extinct in Coreans generally. My specimen was extinct not out of the common run. What was not routine was to him not life, it was dream. As in sleep the most fantastic combinations occur without astonishing us, so to the Corean transplanted into a progressive world, he saw, heard, smelt, tasted without entertaining any surprise at the novelties that met his sensation. His life among Europeans was a dream, from which he would only relapse when again in Corea. I tested this in several ways. In his native peninsula there were in '50 no firearms. After politely inviting him to seat himself astride a brass piece of ordnance we had in the vessel, without giving him a hint that it was charged, I fired the cannon. The shock sent him up into the air eighteen inches, and he fell over on the deck, but expressed no surprise whatever. He had been gnawing the end of his pigtail before I applied the match, and as he lay on the deck after the explosion he was still gnawing. The habit I allude to did not please me. In monkeys it is a sign of being in an unwholesome condition when they bite their tails. I am not sufficiently acquainted with Coreans to say if it be so with them.

On reaching Portsmouth, after a prosperous voyage, I took my Corean to a clothier's shop, and had him rigged out in English costume—a light cut-away, snuff-colored suit, collars, a box hat, boots, gloves, pocket handkerchiefs, and a set of flannel shirts.

Gentlemen, you have no conception of the trouble it gave me to get the man into these clothes. Understand them he never did. Braces were an insoluble enigma to him. His mind was not flexible nor receptive enough to enable him to receive new ideas. For instance, he had a pair of dogskin gloves, brown, stitched with black down the back. They cost me three and six. He persisted in trying to thrust his feet into them and to crush a toe into each finger. As to his braces, he made of them a cravat. I became a nurse to Huggles: he had to be dressed like a child of four. If I left to himself he tangled himself up with his gloves, and box hat, and trousers and paper collars, the whole interlaced inexplicably with his sheets and towels and every antimacassar in the room, that it took me more than an hour unravelling him. His European outfit cost me thirteen pounds fifteen shillings. I had, moreover, to pay the hotel bill at Portsmouth for both of us, as also the double train fare to London. He had no money, and though he offered one of his papers, folded at the ticket office, the clerk refused it, saying: "We don't take stamps."

I hurried up town with Huggles to report myself to my employers.

Go where I would the Corean accompanied me. I could not shake him off. He would not be left behind, moreover I could not trust him without a guard. How could I reckon on what a man with a stationary mind might do in a maelstrom of life like London? I entertained great hopes of consigning him to the firm along with the cargo of the Curlew. But I was disappointed. The owners declined emphatically to have anything to do with him. More than that, they harply reprimanded me for having gone out of my course to Corea, and pointed out to me that I had transgressed rules by receiving a passenger on board without their consent, and without notice. Altogether they were rough with me. I left the office much irritated, and on reaching my lodgings, I sat down and wrote them a sharp letter, reproaching the firm with its inhumanity towards Huggles, and its lack of consideration towards me.

All the answer I received was my discharge from the service of the company.

"Look here, Huggles," said I, "I have saved your life, and have introduced you into a new world, and this is my reward. I am dismissed. They say virtue is its own reward. I have an approving conscience within me that warms me like a hot potato, but all the same, I am sorry that I am out of place."

One day when I and Huggles were walking down Regent street I showed him with pride the contents of the shop windows. "Nothing like this in your country, eh, Huggles?"

Then, suddenly, he went straight through a plate glass window, an enormous sheet. He had seen himself reflected in it, supposed it was a brother Corean, and had advanced with less apathy than usual to meet him. A crowd assembled. Observations were passed. The shopkeeper was irritated—the native and I were obliged to pay for damages as estimated by the tradesman, who put the figures unreasonably high. I really had no notion previously how costly were these plates of glass.

Nor was this the only instance. Ten minutes after Huggles went through another sheet of glass, for precisely the same reason. With a mind so unreceptive, so incapable of learning by experience, of opening to new ideas, it was hopeless to anticipate a speedy end to these disasters.

The education of Huggles was likely to be costly. But worst of all was the certainty that it was no education. He could not progress. He could acquire nothing. As well expect to teach a person without ear to be a musician, or one without faculty of colors to be a painter.

I called a hanson, shoved the Corean in, followed, and drove to a solicitor's office.

"I want to know," said I, "what is to be done with Huggles. I saved his life, and now he adheres to me like a leech."

"Go to the Corean legation," said the solicitor; "there they will free you of your incumbrance."

"Thank you, sir," said I, relieved; "what am I indebted to you for your opinion?"

"Six and eight."

I paid him six shillings and eightpence, and then ordered the driver to take us to the Corean embassy. The driver, after careering over half London, declared that he could not find it. So I bought a London directory, which cost me something like thirty shillings, and I searched in it for the Corean legation, only to discover that there was none. "Next best," said I, "is that of the Japanese. I will try theirs." That embassy would have nothing to do with Huggles. It washed its hands of him. Then I drove to the Chinese embassy and there met with a similar rebuff.

When we got back to my lodgings I was dispirited. "Huggles," said I, "my conscience tells me that I did right in saving your life, yet I am beginning to find out that the following of conscience comes very expensive, and is a sort of extravagant luxury to be indulged in only by those with a balance at their banker's or in possession of a well paid sinecure. I am getting to the end of my loose cash."

"Mahouglath mahouglish," responded the Corean.

"No," said I stamping. "It may be Mahouglath mahouglish to you, but to me it is the same turned topsy turvy. I am father, mother, nurse and special Providence to you, and this is more than I bargained for."

He said nothing, but gazed placidly at me.

"Look here, Huggles," said I, "you go to bed, old man. I'll undress you, and pull off your boots, and undo your braces."

In fact, I was becoming desperate to be alone. I had my intended in London. I had not been able as yet to see her. How could I go to her house take Huggles with me to witness our raptures?

"Yes," said I, "that is it, Huggles. You go to your downy pillow. That's the place for you. Your mind has been on the stretch all day, taking in new notions. Don't worry that poor organ any more. Here! you don't understand your waistcoat: you button it and are getting out of it the wrong way. Leave me to fold up your things. Get into bed, and sleep the sleep of conscious innocence, sleep away the strain on your poor intellect."

Having closed the door on Huggles, I dressed myself for conquest. I brush my hair and put oil on it. I was going now at last to see Polly Jones—my Polly Jones. The attachment that subsisted between us was very tender and ardent. It was the more tender and the more ardent on my side because Miss Jones had five thousand pounds in the three per cents. My resolve had been, on my return, to have run in and out of her house daily, and for that reason had engaged lodgings at no great distance from hers, but hitherto I had been unable to call, Huggles had been in the way. Till freed from him I could not visit her.

This is Dr. McLaughlin's offer to Weak Men: Rheumatics, Dyspeptics, Men with Lame Backs, Weak Kidneys, Lost Vitality, Varicocele, Wasting of Vital Strength, Sciatica, Constipation, "Come and Go" Pains, and to Women with the Weaknesses Peculiar to their sex.

Give me a man broken down with indiscretions—one who has lost the very essence of health—and I will make him feel like a youth of 20 within a month. How? you ask. Simply by pumping a vital stream of electricity into his body in the right way while he sleeps.

Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt

Does wonders in a few applications. It arouses all the dormant energies, develops muscular and nerve life and restores the feeling of youth, courage and manhood. It makes men over again. It makes perfect men of the puniest, weakest specimens of "half men."

Any man or woman who will secure me can have my appliance and pay when cured. I ask no pay in advance.

Are you sick? Are you in pain? Are you a Weak Man? Are you tired of doctoring and paying out money without result? Then come to me or write to me. I AM THE ONLY MAN IN THE WORLD WHO HAS CONFIDENCE ENOUGH IN HIS REMEDY TO WAIT FOR HIS PAY UNTIL YOU ARE CURED.

I give a free test to all who call. If you can't call I will send you my beautifully illustrated book with full information free. Call or write now. Don't delay.
