Blossoms Kiss Her Feet.

The poet sings:
"The clover blossoms kiss her feet,
She is so sweet, she is so sweet."

Dan Creedon has been matched with McCoy for May 18th, in New York, and with Joe Walcott at Milwaukee in June.

The Iroquois football club has organized with these officers: President, T. E. A. Stanley, vice-president, D. Whyte, secretary-treasurer, Rufus Keys.

The Almonte lacrosse club has organized for the season, and will likely go in a league embracing Pembroke, Rendrew, Arnprior, Carleton Place and Smith's Falls.

The Ontario provincial fisheries department has issued a regulation providing that during the run of suckers this spring the fish may be speared in any part of Ontario.

Chatham will place a baseball team in an international league to be formed, embracing London, Hamilton, and Chatham and Muskegon, Grand Rapids and Saginaw in Michigan.

Galt, Berlin, Waterloo and Hespeler will attempt to form a baseball league at Preston on Good Friday. Each town will send a delegate, and each man will insist on strictly amateur baseball.

An Eastern Canadian canoe league is likely to be formed this summer, composed of Ottawa, Montreal, Brockville and Kingston. The organization will be entirely separate from the American canoe association, although perfectly friendly to that body.

A new club—the Toronto driving club—has been formed for the purpose of encouraging, driving and speeding and the development of the light harness horse. The club purposes acquiring a track and holding "speeding" matinees during the summer and winter months.

Champion Jeffries says positively that he will not fight Corbett unless Siler is the referee, instead of Austin. Jeffries also announced that another condition would be that the contestants should be allowed to fight with one arm free after a clinch.

Harry Vardon, champion golfer of the world, in Saturday's match with the Yale gold cracks, broke the record for the eighteen-hole course over the links of the New Haven golf club. He did the course in seventy-four, one less than the record which John Reid, Yale's former golf team captain, did it in two years ago.

The annual meeting of the Eastern football association will be held in Cornwall on Good Friday. This association was formed last year with a membership of six clubs—Point St. Charles, Valleyfield and Cornwall in an eastern division, and Finch, Iroquois and Chesterville in a western division. It is hoped that the association will expand until it embraces one or more clubs in every town in eastern Ontario and western Quebec.

The All-Toronto Association football team which was to have gone to St. Louis in Easter week has postponed the match. It was thought that a far stronger team could be sent later, as all the players are out of condition at present. It is proposed to take the team to St. Louis about May 1st or 30th. The Americans prefer the later date.

The Midland association of baseball clubs was formed at Port Hope Saturday with these clubs: Bowmanville, Oshawa, Cobourg, Globe File, Port Hope, Peterboro, and Lindsay. The following officers were elected: President, George Plunkett, Cobourg; first vice-president, F. Outram, Port Hope; second vice-president, A. J. Bennett; secretary-treasurer, C. Graham, Peterboro. Matches will begin on May 24th.

It is so long since fault was found with the management of C.W.A. affairs that it was believed there was no ground for complaint. It appears, however, that the Montreal Y.M.C.A. bicycle club has withdrawn from the association for the alleged reason that Sunday racing is sanctioned by the C. W. A. The meet to which objection was raised, was held in Terrebonne, Que., Sunday June 11, 1899, and was the first and last sanction of that kind issued by the C.W.A. Years ago the C.W.A. constitution declared against Sunday racing, but the clause was eliminated.

A proposition is on foot to centralize association football. A motion will be made at the coming meeting of the western football association, to be held at Berlin Good Friday, to form Ontario into different districts. It is suggested that there be five or six such districts. The eastern section, comprising six clubs or more, composed of Point St. Charles, Valleyfield, Cornwall, Finch, Iroquois and Chesterfield. Then a section composed of clubs from the Bay of Quinte district, Kingston, Belleville, Pirton and teams in that district. Then a section to be composed of the senior clubs in Toronto, allowing the intercollegiate league to form another section. Then a western section, Galt, Guelph, Berlin, Listowel, Elmira, Woodstock and Seaforth. Then a peninsular section, Essex, Windsor and Chatham. These sections would play off their games scheduled. Then semi final games, the two western, the two eastern, and the two Toronto sections would play off, and by this means the association championship of Ontario could be arrived at. Kingston cannot be depended upon to do much, as outside of a few students of Queen's who attempt to keep the game alive here, it is a dead letter.

Jacob Is Up Again.

At the police court this morning Jacob Barrigan, liberated from the Central prison only a week or two ago, was arraigned before magistrate Duff on a charge of stealing 100 feet of two inch rope from W. Potter, proprietor of the Lake View house. Barrigan said he had no recollection of having taken the rope. He had been chumming around with Henry Fisher. Police constable Aiken stated that Fisher could not be found and asked for time to bring him in. Barrigan was remanded for a day or two. He asked for his liberty meanwhile, and this being refused, requested that he be sentenced forthwith, but this also was cut out. It is thought that Fisher is at Gananoque. The rope was sold to a junk dealer for 25c.

RED CROSS SOCIETY.

Something About a Noble Institution And Its Work.

Just now when Red Cross nurses are so prominently before the world through their work in the Transvaal, and in fact wherever the needs of humanity call them, it might be interesting to know something of the society and how it originated. The story is that on June 24th, 1859, a terrific battle took place near the village of Solferino, Italy, between the allied French and Sardinian forces and the Austrian army. The army of the allies consisted of four divisions of the Sardinian army under king Victor Emanuel, and four French army corps, led by emperor Napoleon III. They were opposed by an immense Austrian force under the command of emperor Francis Joseph. The battle raged for sixteen hours, and ended with the defeat of the Austrians. It was a dearly fought victory for the allies had lost 18,000 men, while the loss of the Austrians was no less than 20,000, besides 6,000 prisoners and thirty cannon. What a scene of carnage and bloodshed! Thirty-eight thousand men killed or wounded covering the field of battle, with scarcely any provision to attend the wounded, rescue the helpless and comfort the dying. It is true there were some small field hospitals but their equipment was of the scantiest sort and in the face of this overwhelming catastrophe their help amounted to but little. Untold numbers of wounded that might have been rescued from an early grave, perished miserably on the field of battle. Eleven years later, June 24th, 1870, the bones of the slain on that field of battle were gathered in three great ossuaries which were consecrated in the presence of representatives of France, Italy and Austria.

The scenes of carnage and suffering on that day were witnessed by a true philanthopist, a Swiss gentleman, Henry Dunant, a physician, whose name, as has been aptly observed, deserves to be inscribed in letters of gold. He published a ghastly account of what he had seen on the battlefield and in the two scanty military hospitals of Solferino, and appealed to all civilized nations, that if men must fight, the horrors of battle should at least be ameliorated by some rules of amenity. Dr. Dunant, in conjunction with his friend, Moynier, chairman of the Geneva society of public utility, conceived the idea of having the permanent neutrality of the sick and ambulance service acknowledged by civilized nations. They formed associations for the promulgation of this idea, and at length pressed it upon the governments of Europe, nearly every one of which sent representatives to a conference held in Geneva, Switzerland, in the month of August, 1864. As a result of this conference a convention was drawn up, known as the Geneva convention, by which is meant an international agreement, the purpose of which is the amelioration of those evils that are inevitable in war, the prevention of useless cruelty, and the establishment of a voluntary service to comfort, nurse and tend the wounded and disabled. By this convention, and the declaration of the neutrality of the military sanitary service, the Red Cross movement displayed its international character; apart from that it is a strictly national institution, each country having its own Red Cross society, serving its own army. The emblem of this society is everywhere a red cross, with the exception of Turkey, where it is a red half-moon, and Japan, where it consists of four red squares.

There are now Red Cross societies established in thirty-three different countries, and they are no longer considered merely a privileged and tolerated institution, but an exceedingly useful aid in time of war, and as such highly appreciated and carefully nurtured by every government. It may not be generally known that in England, as well as in Russia, a red enameled cross is bestowed on ladies who have rendered conspicuous service in time of war.

The Archbishop's Predictment.

Lady's Realm.

The archbishop of York (Dr. Maclagan), like the primate of all England, often travels third-class, and on one of his journeys about the diocese, found himself in a railway carriage with two drunken men. One of them complained that he had been robbed of a five pound note, and was determined to search the pockets of his fellow passengers. "I began to feel rather uncomfortable," says the archbishop, "as I happened to have a five pound note in my pocket. However, I determined to sit quietly and feign sleep. Presently came the challenge 'I say, neighbor,' but I made no answer. Then the man grabbed me by the arm and shook me violently, but I did not wake up. He kept on shaking, but still I remained impassive. Then his friend interfered with, 'I say, Bill, leave him alone, can't you? He's drunker'n you are!'"

Competition in Miracles.

New York Tribune.

A zealous Mohammedan in India proposes to lord Curzon that the British government call a public conference of all religions for the purpose of determining the validity of their pretensions by competition in the performance within a year of some unspecified but manifest miracle.

By this means he hopes to prove that Mohammed was greater than all others, and that his religion is the right one. If he fails to do this he offers himself for crucifixion—a mode of sacrifice which the prophet did not ordain, and which would prove nothing except that Mirza Ahmad of Kadian, the author of the proposal, had courage enough to make a martyr of himself in the interest of his faith.

A Remarkable Shawl.

The duchess of Northumberland possesses a shawl given her by Charles X. of France, which cost a fabulous sum. It is manufactured from the fur of a species of Persian cat, the hair of which is so fine that one strand is hardly visible to the naked eye. The spinning, weaving and fashioning of the material required several years of labor and thousands of cat skins.

The Ottawa correspondent of the Toronto Globe states that the cadets recommended by Lieut.-Col. Kitson for commissions in the imperial army will all be accepted by the minister of militia and endorsed by him.
