the federal government it has to start locally where "you can demonstrate success with what you've been able to do," Wilson explained.

"By identifying those successes and then sharing those best practices, you're (being) a leader and people will listen to you," said Wilson.

Brown wants to see organizations such as OCF issue challenges to area high schools to engage youths in a "two-pronged approach" of education and fundraising, he said.

"Engaging the schools in that collaborative competition would enhance and promote the whole concept. A lot of people would enjoy it at the same time," said Brown.

Kays-Burden said the Region has great treatment programs, describing the Halton Healthcare Services' (HHS) Navigator Program as "innovative and groundbreaking."

"It has the potential to help align services in a way that we haven't been able to do before. I think foundations such as the OCF have an opportunity to be flexible and creative and provide tools and funding," said Kays-Burden.

ROCK recently launched its Family Engagement Initiative, which stresses the importance of "families telling their stories," Kays-Burden said. It encourages them to come forward with their issues.

"The longer we wait, the more entrenched the symptoms become and the harder it is to recover. We need to, as a community, recognize those issues and get help when we need it. There is no health without mental health."
