CLARKE-WALLACE SCRAP.

The Toronto Star answers the Whig's enquiry as to why Mr. Clarke was not at the last meeting of the Grand Lodge of America. It says Mr. Clarke thinks it is about time he got the position of Grand Master, while Mr. Wallace claims it as as a sort of birthright. "This," says our contemporary, "may not be the correct explanation, but the attempt to bury Mr. Clarke in July last seems to bear out the theory."

The connection between the Toronto mayoralty and the grand mastership is not quite apparent, but it is understood that Clarke Wallace laboured with William McLean, the man with the knife, and that however they differed in motives they accomplished the same purpose, namely the defeat of Mr. Clarke. Wallace may have figured that Mr. Clarke's popularity would be hurt by the reverse, and he was not mistaken. This, however, did not affect the fact that he is an able man, and that the people might think he had his hands full of public responsibilities, as a member of parliament, and the Orange order consider, at the same time, that he deserved promotion and was equal to its requirements.

Perhaps Mr. Wallace will see something personal in the signs of the times. If he does not, he ought to do so. This year he received a sharp reminder that he is something of a back number. A committee of the lodge, and the lodge itself, refused to endorse his political address, and if he has any sense he will not repeat the act. Mr. Clarke was not present to hurry or annoy him, but Mr. Clarke's spirit was at work, and it gave the grand master the shock of his life.

TOO MUCH COMPLAINT.

The Whig passed over the recent attempt at election of a bishop for the diocese of Ontario with a plain report of the proceedings and a favorable comment upon the selection made, unfortunately not realized, of dean Williams. But it is necessary now to enter the lists to take exception to a sermon delivered by the archdeacon of Brockville in St. Peter's church. It was so unfair to the Whig that, much as it respects the archdeacon, strong exception must be taken. The election was a time for stirred up feelings and that these feelings did not calm down with the return to the parishes is clear from the sermon in St. Peter's. The archdeacon charged that reports of the proceedings of synod in the Kingston papers were misleading and erroneous, that it is their custom to report church of England proceedings, services and actions as unfavorably as possible; that two-thirds of what appeared in print was absolutely untrue—and may God forgive him; that everything favorable and creditable to the Church of England was suppressed and ordinary details of business misstated; that the paragraphs were wretched and misleading; that they described the synod as a noisy, quarrelsome bear garden; that names were given of clergymen as candidates who were never mentioned. As applied to the Whig there is not one atom of truth in these words, and as this paper has a preponderating influence and circulation in the city and district, and as a member of its staff is intimately related to proceedings in synod, and is head of the laymen's organization, it was due that its credit should be considered. It is not enough to say in private that the Whig was never intended to be included in the criticisms. The archdeacon charged the Kingston papers, when he might have said some of them. The public must have imagined that the newspaper men and not the preachers had given way to feelings and a desire to get even with the other fellows.

The prosperity of synod funds, to which the archdeacon alludes, was not only accurately reported by the Whig at the May committee meetings but was again summarized in the synod proceedings. It is not necessary probably to answer the charge of misrepresentation; not even its political enemies, let alone amiable Anglican churchmen, are accustomed to accuse the Whig of that vice. When the archdeacon says "that everything favorable and creditable to the Church of England was suppressed" he must be speaking without having read the reports, or the long-founded opinion of that gentleman is a huge mistake. The bear-garden reference was all the more ungenerous because the Whig several times referred to the good feeling exhibited on the floor of synod; twice in one issue was this done; and no reflection appeared. Nothing could have been kinder or more dignified than the reports. While it was a pleasure to speak of the decorum in open session the disorder in the clerical conference, when contrasted with the quietude and perfect order of the laymen's conference, would have given good ground for a criticism from the Whig had it been as disposed as the archdeacon is to wash ecclesiastical linen in public. Those who control it have had a warm feeling for the clergy of the Church of England, but it must be confessed that rumors from the clerical conference, of improper election moves, to put it mildly, have lowered that class in general respect. But that is a matter between the laymen and their spiritual advisers, although unfortunately two prominent candidates, one of them especially, have been injured in good standing in a way that is more than "wretched and misleading." Some clergymen will not yet believe that inexcusable denunciations and absolute mis-statements were made use of, but it is a fact. The scenes in the clerical conference can only be compared to the insanity of excitement. While it cannot be said that some of the Kingston papers are always as guarded as they might be, they certainly had ground to compare the clerical caucus to a "bear-garden," to use the archdeacon's own expression. But they are able to defend themselves; the Whig meantime declines a share in the wholesale rebuke. The archdeacon, regarded as a polished gentleman, would take it unkindly if the Whig were to deal out to him the criticism that it might fairly bestow upon other clerics. There are but four newspapers in Kingston. There are but two or three archdeacons in each diocese, and if the criticism of the actions of any one of them is to be habitually applied to all then we would feel sorry for the dignitary of Brockville and several of his brethren of that exalted rank. If the language of one archdeacon regarding another, spoken at this very clerical conference, were to be taken seriously and reported it would be ample justification for some of the criticism about which the sermon complains. It certainly was not the language of dignified discussion, and is not a very good example to set to even the unenlightened reporters upon whom the archdeacon dwells.

It is unfortunate for the church of England that her clergy are supersensitive. They imagine that all reporters and newspapers are banded together against the interests of the church of England. There is no ground for this. Regretfully, however, the sympathies of newspaper men are not attracted to that church because they are perpetually sneered at and denounced by the clergy, somewhat in the way the archdeacon has just dealt with them in unmeasured terms. Reporters act from habit, not prejudice, as a rule. All cannot be so utterly bad as the archdeacon and his brethren claim. Other churches are probably mis-reported occasionally from mis-adventure and newspapers do deal in sensationalism sometimes. The way to win them from this to better methods is not by unfair denunciation, but by kind reproof and sympathetic encouragement. They do not receive the austere treatment from other churches that they do from the church of England; the result is a kindlier feeling for Methodists and Presbyterians in the newspaper sanctuary, and a corresponding gain in interest and support. It is unfortunate for the church that her clergy seem impelled to speak their minds with force and prejudice. Each one of them, if he has an opinion, wants to express it in the firmest way and he is not always bent on ascertaining facts; too often he jumps at conclusions, when his mind should be trained, by profession, to calmness and christian expression. The result is a constant lack of harmony and respect.

The archdeacon dwells upon the ignorance and faults of reporters; little he seems to know how rare the newspaper talent is—how difficult it is to secure it persons for the higher places on even small dailies. Very few are the successful journalists Kingston and Brockville have produced, and yet there has been an endless procession for sixty years of workers on the press, for changes have been very frequent in many of the offices because of misfits. Journalists are not recruited from the ranks of the clergy; these gentlemen fail in nine cases out of ten. If they will kindly remember this when criticizing the press, it will have a happy result. College has developed them on one side, giving them a pride of station, but it has not brought them many talents of tact, fair judgment and brightness which the writers possess.

Hartington Happenings.

Hartington, June 18.—Rev. Mr. Kelly preached his farewell sermon here last evening to a large audience. Rev. Mr. Perly will be his successor. Many attended the concert at Harrowsmith Friday evening. J. M. Robertson left last week for Lachute, near Montreal, on a business trip. Mrs. W. Guess has returned from the general hospital not much improved in health. Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Moor spent Sunday in the city, visiting his brother, John Moor, who is in the hospital. Mrs. J. Lake is visiting friends at Westbrook. Miss Myrtle Taylor returned to Glenvale, yesterday, after spending two weeks with friends here.

The opposition convention of British Columbia passed a resolution by an unanimous vote asking for the resignation of Lieut.-Gov. McInnes.

A POPULAR MINISTER.

Sorry To Lose Rev. C. Wesley Walker—Want Him Back.

Tichborne, June 18.—Our pastor, Rev. C. W. Walker, of Kingston, leaves tomorrow for home, after a year of brilliant success. He came to us one year ago, unknown, but by his pulpit eloquence, his fine singing, his faithful pastoral work, his shrewd financing, his courteous bearing, his buoyant disposition and self-sacrificing spirit, he has won the admiration and love of all, irrespective of class or creed.

His departure is greatly regretted from one end of the mission to the other, more especially by the young people, to whom he has ever been a source of inspiration. Among his achievements, may be mentioned the organization of two Sabbath-schools and the Tichborne glee club, the singing of the latter having won for him unstinted praise. His work in general has been so highly satisfying and keenly appreciated that we have been able to pay him forty dollars more than our guarantee— a much greater salary than was ever paid before on this mission. Two largely signed petitions for Mr. Walker's return for next year were presented to the chairman of the mission board, but we were grieved to learn that it was not customary to allow an unordained man to remain a second year on a mission; so with sorrow his friends bowed to the inevitable.

A farewell social will be held this evening for Mr. Walker on the lawn of Joseph Harris, where the glee club and other friends will bid him sorrowful and loving adieu. Mr. Walker has been requested to assist Rev. J. D. Ellis, B.A., on Sawyerville circuit, Quebec district, for the ensuing year. This is one of the best double-circuits in the Montreal conference; but Mr. Walker has not yet decided to accept, as he wishes to attend Victoria university next year. Sunday night he preached a profound and eloquent farewell sermon to a crowded house, from the text, "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers."

DOWN-THE-RIVER NOTES.

Affairs at T. I. Park—Teachers' Convention to Meet.

Thousand Island Park, June 18.—The park is looking unusually fine for this season of the year. A fine rain on Saturday night did a deal of good. Every steamer calling here brings cottagers, who are coming much earlier than usual. The Columbian is beautifully illuminated every evening now and will continue so until the close of the season. The association has built a printing office for "Cooper, the Printer," on St. Lawrence avenue. He is now occupying it. They will also add an addition to the New England immediately. Charles Mathiew, glass-blower, has arrived and can be found at his old stand next to the book store. The New York state teachers' association will meet here the first week in July. An invitation will be sent to the Canadian teachers to attend the meeting. Following, directly the New York summer institute will open here for a number of weeks in the school institute building. Charles A. Shaw, Watertown, will be conductor this year. All the large hostelries on the river will open for business next week. The Richelieu & Ontario navigation company steamers call here now. Rev. Dr. Hard and family, Kingston, Pa., have arrived and are settled for the summer at their beautiful cottage on Headland avenue. The Watertown high school pupils have an excursion on the river this week, and will call at this place. The steamer America called here for a few minutes on Saturday evening. She had a Kingston excursion party on board. Tabernacle services opened yesterday for the season and were conducted by Rev. I. E. C. Sawyer, D.D., director of tabernacle services.

Fernleigh Facts.

To Tramp Around World.

Wichita, Kan., June 19.—B. E. Amos, a young man twenty-two years old, today left this city for a tramp around the world expected to occupy three years. The attempted feat is not for a wager, but merely to satisfy a desire to see the world in such a manner. He expects to earn sufficient money to defray expenses, by writing letters to various newspapers.
