HERE'S THE MACHINE.

Col. Quay is Philadelphia's political boss who has fallen in popularity. He wanted to be elected a senator, and the republicans in the legislature divided on him and made his call impossible.

When the legislature adjourned the governor strained his prerogative and appointed Quay a senator. His appointment was protested, and the senate cancelled it.

Last week, at the republican national convention, Col. Quay's friends made a demonstration in his favour. It impressed Mark Hanna, the manager of the republican national campaign, and in a talk with State Senator Magee, he laid down the rule of the machine.

What is it? That those who, after taking part in a republican caucus, say for the vacant senatorship, refuse to be bound by its action, will have "the seal of condemnation" put upon them by the administration. "There's to be no sulking in Pennsylvania during this campaign," said Mark Hanna with an emphasis that meant that he knew what he was talking about.

But there's another man down that way who is not so noisy and quite as influential, and his name is John Wanamaker, who has not made any money out of politics, and is not in them because he likes them. He has no use for Quay, and will not support him at any cost.

It is the machine against the man. One must be broken. Which will it be?

INTERNATIONAL COURTESIES.

A Detroit paper, suitably marked or inscribed by a friend, calls the Whig's attention to a further insult to the British flag under the most remarkable circumstances.

The occasion was the visit to Detroit of Admiral Dewey, the hero of Manila. He sailed down the St. Clair river on a government boat, the Tashmoo, and at Walkerville was given a salute from a quick-firing gun, while a great streamer carried the announcement that Canadians had "best wishes for America's great seaman and Britain's warm friend." Windsor joined in the jubilation, by the blowing of whistles and waving of flags. "All along the Canadian shore crowds cheered wildly," says the correspondent, and Dewey, sending a message ashore, added his "thanks to Canadians for the very cordial greeting and the warm sympathy they had manifested for the United States." All this was eminently fit and proper.

But the scene changed. Admiral Dewey and his party had landed and nicely settled in Detroit's chief hotel. The enthusiasm of the natives still run high. A squad of young men, from the Detroit college of law, passing down Woodward avenue, spied a British flag flying between two American flags before a well-known jewellery house. It was pulled down and dragged about a block amid the yelling of the students and the cries of the small boys and bystanders. Finally it was abandoned to the police, who took it back to the owner. "The names of the students who committed the deed cannot be ascertained," said the Free Press, though they paraded the street for hours and returned again and again to the scene of the disturbance to make insulting references to the flag.

More notable still—all this occurred nearly opposite the city hall, close to a police station, and not far from where Admiral Dewey was staying. It was a queer response to the observations of Admiral Dewey, a few days ago, and to the effect that he does not know what he should have done at Manila without the sympathy and active support of the British admiral. Besides Detroit is the home of General Alger, late secretary of war, who has frequently stated that the United States should not forget that Great Britain was behind it in the Spanish-American war. Evidently the spirit of gratitude is wanting in the American people to say nothing of the spirit of courtesy and good feeling.

MAN AND KNIFE AGAIN.

Sir Charles Tupper went to Haldimand just to show that he and Dr. Montague were the best of friends, and to disprove the story that they are at daggers' points. Dr. Montague was one of the conspirators against the weal of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, one of the gang who held up the premier during a session of parliament, one who forced a change of government.

McLean, of the World, says Montague began his cut-throat business in 1896, that he has been at it ever since, and that he is at it now. He is alleged to have designs upon Sir Charles' political life, and it was to show that he was not afraid that the leader of the opposition went to Haldimand and at Hagersville was introduced to Montague's friends. They professed to be very much pleased with each other, and spent a short time in exchanging gilt-edged and guileless chaff.

Down at Ottawa there was a different feeling. The Clark Wallace-McLean faction accepted the Hagersville demonstration as an evidence, and they will probably speak to Sir Charles about it when he reaches the capital. He is between two fires and cannot escape a scorching. He has decided, apparently, that if he must drop one party it cannot be Montague and Haggart, and their following. It is an intimation to McLean that thought he professes to admire and support Sir Charles now, time was when he wobbled, when he insinuated desertion, when he did harm with his knife. Practically this knife is all he can boast of, and he is at liberty to sharp it afresh and resume his rib-stabbing.

In all this one sees the harmony which is understood to prevail in the conservative party and give promise of success at the next election.

ALOOF FROM POLITICS.

It is said of General Andre, the new minister of war in the French government—the eighth in two years—that "he is an accomplished artillery officer, and has always kept himself aloof from politics." It is the redeeming feature of the soldier, and must be practiced in future by the British officer.

Julian Ralph, in one of his splendid letters to the London Mail, says that the British officer is everything that can be desired, less his devotion to the service. He is quick to adapt himself to emergencies, he is sacrificing, bold, courageous and cool, but he will, even in war, think about the trifles of society and allow them to divert him from the serious business he has in hand. It is all the outcome of the most pernicious custom that has prevailed in England, and a consequence of which the officer has become a sort of society pet. He has had to be a man of means in order to stand the strain upon his pocket book, and while he has been a soldier he has not had his profession at heart.

All this will, or should be changed, as a result of the war. The army henceforth will be a highly trained, national machine, into which the thought and time and life of the officers will be put, for it is the one and only side of the army that needs improvement. Tommy Atkins is described by all the war correspondents as the ideal soldier, and Britain owes him too much to ever think of again entrusting him in war to men less disciplined and less inured to hardship.

Gen. Andre has the correct idea of his position in France. He has kept away from the political strife in which too many officers in France have indulged. He is a soldier, first and last, and has an ambition to exalt his profession and make it the best possible. His predecessor, Galloché, now retired on account of ill health, was the most successful and effected in a few months more reforms than had been brought to pass in many years. The French officer, by the way, is the best in the world, the superior of even the German, with all his instinct for service.

Napoleon had the conviction that an English army, commanded by French officers, would be simply invincible. A second Napoleon, in his methods, is Lord Kitchener. Some day he will be at the head of the English army, and he will rid officialdom of the society ideas that now dominate it.

OFFICIAL LIFE WRECKED.

Mr. McInnes, ex-lieutenant-governor has not improved his case by writing to the press about it. He alleges that Sir Wilfrid Laurier acted on the demand of a party convention. We question that. The premier, asked about the crisis in British Columbia, and before McInnes had transmitted his explanations to Ottawa, said the lieutenant-governor had practically referred the case to the people, and that the future depended upon their verdict.

Mr. McInnes refers to the fact that the members of the old government were defeated. So was the new government, and the return of so many who were opposed to Martin indicated that he of all men was not acceptable to the people. Mr. McInnes staked his all upon Mr. Martin's cause, and they went down together.

Mr. McInnes says: "I had been aware that Mr. Martin was distasteful to the Laurier government, and that if I considered my own interests and my own position merely I would, under no circumstances, call upon him." Who made him aware of all this? Not the government, surely, nor any one in its behalf, and idle gossip should not influence the representative of vice royalty in the discharge of his duty. Mr. Martin is understood to have a grievance with the federal government, but that government is not at all likely to bar his progress to usefulness anywhere. The lieutenant-governor should not make statements which he cannot justify.

The political convention which called upon him to resign, was not the only influence at work. Public opinion was against him, and when he did not retire from office within a reasonable time after the election the federal government had no recourse but to force it. Sir Wilfred Laurier did his duty in a kind and considerate manner.

Ah, but Mr. McInnes received instructions from the secretary of state in August, and later, in regard to his attitude towards the ministers. These letters were marked confidential. In following them, the ex-lieutenant-governor says he got himself into trouble. The facts cannot be judged without the correspondence. It would appear as if the Ottawa government had tried to keep the old man right, and he was bound to go wrong. He has been mayor, member of parliament, senator and lieutenant-governor, and had he grown in wisdom with experience ought to have been very discreet. But he had two smart sons who advised him probably more than his ministers, and they made a wreck of him officially.

Every berth on the steamer Rideau Queen was taken previous to the departure of the steamer for Ottawa this morning. Travel on the Rideau is increasing.

The past week has been a most unfortunate one for the steamer Glengarry. Its chief engineer was drowned on Saturday night, and on Wednesday the steamer's machinery broke down.

Teachers Discuss The Question.

The school teachers met in the Central school yesterday afternoon and discussed school attendance, taking as their text a Whig editorial. They were a little inclined to anger, and there was no one to suggest, "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." It is said they passed a resolution embodying their opinion, which resolution may be presented to the board at its meeting to-night. The teachers say they have faithfully carried out every instruction given them and that the schools are not depleted in attendance.

BOARDS OF CONCILIATION.

Mr. Mulock Explains the Provision of His Bill.

Ottawa, June 27.—When the house of commons met this morning the postmaster-general introduced a very important bill to aid in the prevention and settlement of trade disputes and the publication of statistical and industrial information. One object of this measure, he explained, was to promote the settlement of trade disputes between employers and employees, to prevent by the employment of a board of conciliation strikes and lockouts, and where strikes have already occurred to promote their settlement.

Another feature of the measure is to provide for the establishment of a department of labor whose duty it shall be to gather statistical and general information affecting labor, and to issue a monthly labor gazette which will fill the same position towards the great interest of labor as the trade and commerce report fills toward trade and the agricultural report toward agriculture. This gazette will not be a medium for the expression of opinions, but for the registration of statistics, a valuable journal for both employers and employees, enabling them to better understand the conditions affecting both sides. In this respect Canada was certainly far ahead of many countries, and was following the lead of Great Britain herself.

Failing conciliation the bill will provide for reference to boards of arbitration. But there was a wide difference between the constitution of these two bodies. In the case of the board of conciliation the members will be themselves parties to the dispute the employees or their representatives. They would not therefore be delegating authority to outsiders. The board of arbitration would simply be called in after the failure of conciliation. If the conciliators arrive at a conclusion the parties concerned will meet together around the same table, exchange views and become, perhaps, better acquainted each side with the other, a better spirit is evoked and the result is that ultimately consent is reached.

It will be possible for the machinery to be set in motion either by the parties to the difference or by the department of labor, any of the parties can evoke it. There will be no cast-iron rules. Since the British act had been passed the records showed that six-sevenths of the disputes have been amicably settled by consent of the parties and he had hoped that the Canadian act would prove no less of a boon and that by it it will come to be recognized that resort should only be had to a strike or lockout when all more peaceful methods have proven ineffective.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Movements of the People — What They Are Saying and Doing.

MONEY FOR CANALS.

Statement by Mr. Blair Respecting Future Expenditures.

Ottawa, June 28.—The minister of railways gave in the house of commons a very complete statement in connection with the outlay on the Canadian canal system, and the development for which he looks in the trade our waterways are to build up.

Dealing with the financial aspect of the canal question Mr. Blair figured out that the waterway from Ste. Marie to Lachine, 1,000 miles, has been, down to April 1st this year, $77,749,586. In addition to this the government was contemplating to provide for a further outlay on the Trent valley canal, which will, when completed, exceed $6,000,000, and will bring the total up to $85,000,000, for original construction and enlargement.

Capital expenditure yet to be made is upon the following canals, namely:

Sault Ste. Marie	$1,050,000
Welland Canal	1,270,000
North Channel, Galops	510,000
Galops Canal	592,000
Rapide Plat Canal	312,000
Farran's Point Canal	246,000
Cornwall Canal	253,000
River Reaches	103,000
Soulanges Canal	900,000
Lake St. Louis Channel	497,000
Lachine Canal	967,000
Murray Canal	10,000
Trent Canal	3,536,000
	$10,253,500

At Head Of His Profession.

Winnipeg Free Press:

There is a movement on foot among the teachers of the province to secure the services of Prof. S. H. Clark, of the university of Chicago, (formerly of Kingston), for institute work in September. The professor is at the head of the department of public speaking in the university, and is recognized as one of the most prominent authorities of the day in reading. If the arrangements are carried out Prof. Clark will conduct institute work at the leading points throughout the province.

It is intended to spend $300,000 in the construction of the Trent canal.

The Various Events Which Ha Created Interest.

Mr. Seagram has two horses entered at Sheepshead Bay.

The annual regatta at Oliver's Ferry will take place this year on Perth's civic holiday, Aug. 10th.

Judge Wardell, formerly owned by Adam Beck, won the fifth race at St. Louis, Tuesday, at ten to one.

Major Taylor made his first appearance in a bike race at Manhattan Beach and was beaten by Fisher Eaton.

Entries for the annual tournament of the Montreal lawn tennis club will close on July 3rd, first round to be played before July 11th.

The members of the Frontenac lacrosse ball team practice almost nightly on the diamond at Lake Ontario park. The ground is in good condition for games.

The Ponies and Athletics are scheduled to play a ball game at Lake Ontario park on Saturday afternoon, the first of the baseball league series of games. It will be a hotly-contested match.

A number of wheelmen, who were practising on the fair grounds track last evening, were accidentally locked in. In order to get out they were obliged to climb the high fences, and lift their wheels over.

The difficulty between the C.W.A. and the C.C.A., arising over a permit for the races to be held at Ottawa on July 2nd, was amicably settled at a meeting of delegates from each association. The meet is to be called the eighteenth annual meet of the C.W.A., of which the C.W.A. is to get ten per cent. of the net receipts. The races are to be run under a sanction from the C.C.A. The Capital club is to have the privilege of appointing its own officials, subject to the sanction of the C.C.A. Races on Provincial meets already sanctioned by the C.W.A. are to receive recognition from the C.C.A. Thus the C.C.A. is to nominally have charge of the races while the C.W.A. will reap the financial benefits. Among those already entered is Eddie C. Bald, who has not ridden on a Canadian track since 1892. He will bring his motor cycle with him.
